Escape Cut Off, Chinese Left in Retreat Vow to Die Fighting.

Chiang Shifts War To Western Lakes

Japanese in North Take Taiyuanfu; Defenders Killed to a Man.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Wednesday), Nov. 10.—Japanese shock troops, supported by tanks and batteries of machine guns, opened a spirited attack all along Zahwei Creek this morning in an attempt to drive the last remaining Chinese forces from Shanghai.

Entrenched behind sand-bagged barricades in the Nantao native district bordering the French Concession, the Chinese, estimated at about 6,000 men, were resolved to resist until death.

There was no avenue of escape expect across the Whangpoo River or into the French area, where they would be disarmed and interned.

[Terrified Chinese—civilians and police and soldiers who ripped off their uniforms—began pouring into the foreign zone today from Nantao, the United Press reported.

[Many threw themselves at barbed wire entanglements, cutting their clothes and flesh to be able to display wounds and gain admission to the foreign area, where they were disarmed and herded into the French police station—Editor's note.]

Chiang Denies Vital Blow.

Withdrawal of Shanghai's defenders under cover of darkness last night toward their "winter line" protecting Nanking, China's capital, was not a vital blow to the nation's defenses, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek declared.

He said it would shift the war scene to the great delta lands of the lake region west of Shanghai, where China has several strong lines reaching about 50 miles to Changshu, Kashing and Soochow.

Japanese communiques from North China reported the fall of another city, Taiyuanfu, capital of Shansi Province. It said Japanese troops occupied the city, the fourth China provincial capital taken in the four months of the northern campaign, after 24 hours of bitter street fighting from which not one Chinese soldier escaped alive.

(In Washington, United States Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, urged that the Brussels conferees denounce the Far Eastern conflict as a Japanese war against China. He proposed a United States boycott of Japanese goods.)

Japanese troops pressing in pursuit of the Chinese retreating from Shanghai rounded the corner of the French Concession and passed the Siccawei Cathedral along Siccawei Creek.

Japan May Discard Nine-Power Treaty

Tokyo (Wednesday), Nov. 10 (U.P.).—The powerful newspaper Nichi Nichi predicted today Japan will renounce the Nine-Power Treaty guaranteeing peace in China or propose its revision.

Such action, the newspaper said, would be simultaneous with Japan's reply to the second invitation for her to participate in the Nine-Power conference in Brussels.

Ramsay MacDonald Dies Suddenly at Sea

Was First Labor Prime Minister of Great Britain.

By the Associated Press.

London, Nov. 9.—James Ramsay MacDonald, 71-year-old former prime minister, died tonight aboard the liner Reina Del Pacifico en route to South America for his health.

It was believed he died of a heart attack.

MacDonald's son-in-law, Dr. A. MacKinnon, of Leeds, received the news by radio from the vessel.

The body will be embalmed and sent to Bermuda, where the vessel is due November 15.

Mr. MacDonald retired as prime minister June 7, 1935, and was succeeded by Stanley Baldwin.

Mr. MacDonald had been in indifferent health in recent years, and just a year ago tonight he collapsed while attending the lord mayor's banquet in the Guildhall, a function that was held again tonight, shortly before news of his death was received.

The former prime minister was accompanied on the South American cruise by his daughter Sheila.

MacDonald was beginning a three-month vacation, which he had described as the first he had ever had free from care.

News of his death was received as a great shock in England.

Dr. MacKinnon announced:

"The message said he peacefully passed away at 8.45 p. m. We assume that it was a heart attack."

MacKinnon's wife was formerly Miss Joan MacDonald, the former prime minister's second daughter.

His son, Malcolm MacDonald, who is minister of dominions in the cabinet of Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, received the news in Brussels where he is attending the Nine-Power Conference on the Sino-Japanese conflict.

His third daughter, Miss Ishbel MacDonald, who accompanied her father to the United States when he visited President Hoover in 1929, was informed of Mr. MacDonald's death by radio. She now is engaged in managing a rural inn.

Italy Held Cause As Russian Aide Quits Brussels

Anti-Red Pact Discussion or Protest at Isolation Believed Purpose.

By the Associated Press.

London, Nov. 9.—The abrupt departure of Maxim Litvinoff from the Brussels conference was interpreted tonight as meaning either or both of these things:

1. A protest against what Russia considered a Brussels maneuver to leave her out of any Sino-Japanese mediation conferences while leaving Italy in.

2. A preliminary to a Soviet defense council on how to meet Italy's adherence to the German-Japanese anticomintern pact.

Isolation Attempt Protested.

Russia already has protested to Italy that her signature to the pact was not friendly toward the Soviets. She also has accused the Fascists of trying to isolate her in European action on Spanish nonintervention and undoubtedly expects the same tactics from Rome at the Brussels conference.

[Premier Mussolini ma answer Russia's protest by denouncing the 1933 Italo-Russian friendship treaty, informed Fascist circles said, according to the United Press.—Editor's note.]

Unofficially, Japanese spokesmen have made it clear to Brussels conferees they would exchange information only with signatories of the Nine-Power Pact.

May Involve U. S.

This would support the position of those who might want to keep Russia off the conciliation committee, for Russia is not a signatory of the treaty, which pledges respect for China's territorial integrity, but was invited to the Brussels conference because of her interests in the Far East. Italy is a signatory.

It was felt in London that the United States could not ignore the potentialities of the agreement because of South America. The possibility that efforts might be made to bring Brazil into the anti-communism front was held by some to threaten involvement of the United States through the Monroe Doctrine.

Chances of Brazil's joining in the agreement were considered negligible by Brazilian officials in London.

Plot Against Kerensky Brings Arrest of Two

Paris (Wednesday), Nov. 10 (U.P.).—Police today arrested two men in a bizarre spy plot against Alexander Kerensky, provisional premier of Russia in 1917 and a bitter anti-Communist.

The men were successive tenants of an apartment from which a secret telephone line was discovered giving access to conversations of Kerensky's private secretary, Michael Zenzenov.

Windsors to Tour U. S. After Yuletide Only for Pleasure

By the United Press.

Paris, Nov. 9.—The Duke and Duchess of Windsor, enthusiastically preparing to sail for New York immediately after Christmas, have abandoned all intentions of studying American industrial and housing conditions, English friends of the duke said last night.

Their tour, which will take them to Honolulu for a holiday after a few weeks in the United States, will be strictly a "pleasure visit."

The tour will be unsponsored, in view of the repercussions that followed his selection of Charles E. Bedaux, industrial speed-up system inventor, as his official guide for the original trip, it was said.

Simpson Will Wed Mary Kirk Raffray Soon, He Affirms

New York, Nov. 9 (AP).—Tall, blue-eyed Ernest Simpson, former husband of the Duchess of Windsor, and the woman who introduced him to her will be married within a few weeks.

Shortly before Mrs. Mary Kirk Raffray, long-time friend of both Simpson and the duchess, obtained a Reno divorce today from Jacques A. L. Raffray, Simpson confirmed reports of the romance.

When the former Wallis Warfield was married to her first husband, Lieut. Earl Winfield Spencer, Mrs. Raffray was her bridesmaid. Raffray, former French army officer, is an insurance broker.

House Group Acts to Ease Tax on Gains

Sub-committee Approves Plan to Deduct Old Capital Losses.

Treasury Will Agree to Change if Revenue Is Found Elsewhere.

By Robert C. Albright.

Modification of loss restrictions in the capital gains tax, at an estimated cost to the Treasury of $19,000,000 in revenue annually, yesterday won approval of the House Ways and Means tax sub-committee.

It was the first substantial Congressional concession to mounting business criticism of the levy. Agreement came with full Treasury approval, despite expected revenue sacrifices, which committeemen said must be "picked up" elsewhere in the tax structure.

The highly complex and little understood gains tax, a headache to investors and a prolific field for tax lawyers, is due for still further changes and simplification, House tax spokesmen said.

Losses to Carry Over.

Under the plan approved yesterday, losses from capital transactions sustained in one year, when not entirely offset by capital gains in the same year, would be carried over into the next year for deduction from taxable gains. No such loss carryover privilege is allowed in the present law.

Before the sub-committee, Undersecretary of the Treasury Roswell Magill said the Treasury had no objection to the change if Congress provides new revenue elsewhere to recoup the estimated $19,000,000 revenue loss. He reiterated that the Treasury will insist on retaining aggregate Federal revenues at present levels.

With an eye to further gains tax revision, which may involve additional revenue losses, the sub-committee asked the Treasury to supply information on three other pending proposals.

Other Changes Proposed.

These proposals include;

Substitution of a flat tax on capital gains, in lieu of the present ordinary income and surtax rates.

Curtailment from 10 years to 5 in the length of time property must be held before minimum taxes apply.

Realignment of rates for specific periods of profit-taking, over the proposed 5-year span.

The Treasury was asked to submit revenue estimates on four suggested flat tax rates—15 per cent, 20 per cent, 22½ per cent and 25 per cent. Before 1934, capital gains were all taxed at a flat 12½ per cent rate.

Profits Levy Next.

Both capital gains and undivided profits taxes have been targets for increasing protests by business and industrial leaders, who complained of undue hardships hindering recovery. Flow of capital into industrial production, and security market transactions have been handicapped by gains tax restrictions, critics contend.

Recently, high Administration officials have favored modification of both levies. The House sub-committee tomorrow will take up proposed changes in the undivided profits tax, chief subject of business complaint.

"We will keep in mind the situation of small corporations, and relief from the hardships and inequities in

New Spending Dropped; RFC Help to Railways Considered.

Way Sought to Stimulate Industry to Take Up Trade Slack.

By Franklyn Waltman.

In the series of conferences which he is now holding with Cabinet members, independent agency chiefs and Government economists, President Roosevelt definitely is seeking ways and means to stimulate private industry to take up the slack which has developed in business instead of increasing Government spending at this time.

This was learned yesterday in an authoritative quarter. What specific undertakings may emerge from these conferences has not been definitely determined, except that in recent days the President and his Administration have struck a more conciliatory attitude toward business and industry. Revision of taxes which business regards as a deterrent to sound progress may be one step of encouragement.

It is possible that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may resume lending to railroads for equipment purchases and right-of-way improvement. Jesse H. Jones, RFC chairman, was one of the White House visitors yesterday. But, as far as can be learned, nothing definite has been settled. Mr. Roosevelt still is in the process of surveying the situation from every angle—future employment and pay roll prospects; future price trends; condition of banks; points where industrial production has slacked off and adequacy of existing relief funds.

Results of these deliberations should become known within the next week or so. The President can hardly avoid the recent economic developments in his message to the special session of Congress which convenes Monday. He is scheduled to address the country Sunday night to urge co-operation in the taking of the national unemployment census next week. Other Administration figures will speak in the next few days for the same purpose. What they say regarding unemployment may afford clews to the program which will be followed for the next few months.

Broad Reforms Asked By Kennedy to Revive 'Sick' Ship Industry

War Strength Navy Is Urged; 10 Changes Made in Command

Admr. Bloch to Relieve Admr. Hepburn as Chief of Fleet.

A war strength Navy was urged in his annual report yesterday by Admiral Adolphus Andrews, chief of the Bureau of Navigation, while Secretary of the Navy Swanson announced ten shifts in the fleet's command.

Admiral Andrews called attention to "disturbed international conditions" in pointing out that present appropriations permit the Navy to be manned at about 86.1 per cent of its full enlisted strength. In case of emergency, he said, the deficiency in enlisted personnel will be supplied "in large part" by "former enlisted men now in the Fleet Naval Reserve" but warned this might involve a serious loss of time.

He also said poor pay caused discomfort and hardship in the Navy, especially to younger officers and men.

Revision of the fleet high command announced by Secretary Swanson began with Admiral Arthur Jay Hepburn, fleet commander-in-chief, who will be succeeded by Admiral Claude C. Bloch, now battle force commander, about February 1. The Navy Department said there was "no significance" in the changes, which must be approved by President Roosevelt.

Admiral Hepburn was ordered to command of the Twelfth Naval District with headquarters at San Francisco.

Secretary Swanson also announced appointment of a selection

Maritime Act Changes, Subsidies Favored in Data to Congress.

Editorial, "A Sick Industry," page 8.
Labor Section of Report, page 10.

By Edward T. Folliard

The United States Maritime Commission yesterday reported to Congress that the American merchant marine is "a very sick industry."

In a frank, often vehement analysis, it said that the two chief ailments were old, wornout ships and a "disgraceful" labor situation.

The commission told Congress that the Government-aided merchant fleet, 91 per cent of which will be absolescent by 1942, practically has to be rebuilt. However, it added, such is the poverty of most of the shipping lines that the Government will have to build most of the replacement vessels—maybe all of them.

But any plan for rehabilitating the American merchant marine, the commission emphasized, will be in vain, no matter how much money is spent or how many ships built, unless the "deplorable" labor situation is solved and efficiency and order restored.

To that end, Chairman Joseph P. Kennedy submitted to Congress two recommendations:

1. Establishment of a mediation board to handle maritime disputes similar to the board created by the railway labor act.

Training Course Urged.

2. The training of 500 young men each year under supervision of the United States Coast Guard. They would be American citizens between 18 and 23, and would be drawn from all parts of the country. After training ashore and afloat, they would be available for the merchant marine.

The commission's comment on the labor situation was a double-barreled broadside, aimed at the ship operator as well as at the seaman. It said:

"The employer, for his part, has fostered long hours, low wages and cramped quarters. The employe, meanwhile, has abused his employment in a manner that would not be tolerated in any other industry.

"Conditions in the American Merchant Marine are disgraceful. Order and discipline have in many cases disappeared. Passengers complain of insolent treatment. Vessels have been delayed by the frequent use of the 'sit-down' and 'quickie.' Such conditions must be remedied and remedied forthwith.

Opposes Superliners.

"With conditions remaining as they are today, it is only a question of time before disgusted shippers and worried travelers turn to the vessels of our competitors."

The commission opposed the construction of American $50,000,000 "superliners" like Britain's Queen Mary and France's Normandie, saying they would represent mere "window dressing" and an unwise expenditure of Government funds. Also, it added, they would make splendid targets for airplanes and submarines in war time.

The commission said that flying boats carrying 40 to 50 passengers and crossing the Atlantic in 20 hours, were a "near reality," and it recommended that the responsibility of developing this new form of transport be lodged in the Maritime Commission.

Viewing the merchant marine from the standpoint of the national

Three Trapped In Woods Fires Die of Burns

2 West Virginia Youths, Prince Georges Man Are Victims.

An aged Prince Georges County man and two boys from West Virginia were fatally burned in brush and forest fires yesterday.

The boys, trapped on a mountain rock near Welch, W. Va., were Harry Faust, 19, and Thomas Jones, 12, who lived in the mining town of Worth, W. Va. They had gone out to see if a forest fire had damaged a cabin they had built.

Samuel Woodend, 62, was fatally burned when he was trapped by flames in a field near his home in Prince Georges County, Md., where he had gone to burn the field clear of broomsage.

Brush fires flared in surrounding counties last night. Firemen kept them under control. A slight fire started in Arlington County.

Hagerstown, Nov. 9.—A forest fire in the Dark Wood area of South Mountain, 9 miles east of here, was brought under control at 3 a. m. today by several hundred volunteers under Fire Warden Harry S. Leasure after it had burned over 300 acres of timberland.

Picketing Looms At House Offices, Capitol in Strike

A strike, consequences of which may include picketing of the Capitol and both House office buildings when Congress reconvenes next week, was called yesterday in protest against tolerance of "open shop" conditions by David Lynn, architect of the Capitol.

Painters and Decorators, Local No. 368, withdrew 40 union members doing maintenance work in the Capitol and House Office Building because Lynn had hired 32 non-union painters.

Seeking an early settlement, with Congress only days away, Lynn succeeded in having the Labor Department conciliation service call a conference yesterday afternoon. A decision by Carl R. Schedler, conciliation commissioner assigned to the dispute, may be handed down today.

Barred From U. S., Magda Applies for Hearing in Capital

New York, Nov. 9.—Barred from this country on grounds of "moral turpitude," Magda de Fontanges appealed from Ellis Island tonight for an opportunity to tell Washington authorities all about the romantic interlude she said she had with Premier Benito Mussolini.

The svelte, red-haired French journalist, who came here to appear in a Broadway night club at $50 a week, was excluded after a private hearing before a special board of inquiry.

Mme. de Fontanges was convicted in Paris last summer of shooting Count Charles Pineton de Chambrun, former French ambassador to Italy. She testified he had broken up her "unforgettable hours of love with Mussolini."

Slaughter of Haitians Described by Observer

Men, Women and Babies Slain by 'Thousands' in Dominican Purge.

By Louis Jay Heath.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

Haitian men were hacked to death, women killed with three-pointed daggers and babies tossed on bayonets in the hands of drunken Dominican rural police, according to a series of reports on the recent "massacre" in the Dominican Republic.

Written by an American neutral observer on the Haitian side of the border, whose name for obvious reasons may not be disclosed, the reports present the first detailed account of the Dominican purge in which upward to 5,000 Haitians are reported killed.

The first report, dated October 6, forecast the events which led to the slaughter. It told of "serious trouble" at Dajabon, of the death of "quite a number of Haitians at the hands of Dominican police," and of the arrival at the hospital of a "camion load of wounded," who had "been stabbed or shot."

Eight days later the writer of the reports recalled he had mentioned the Haitian trouble, accused authorities of trying to "hush up matters" and said he had been told that "the number of murders runs into the hundreds."

"No satisfactory explanation has yet been offered," the report said.

The correspondent then revised his reports and fixed the number of dead at "thousands." He said that on October 2 50 Haitians were killed and "their bodies thrown into the sea at Monti Cristo." A visitor told the correspondent that a large prison at Monti Cristi was "packed with others, men, women and children, and that when the order came

Leaders Study Special Taxes For Farm Aid

President, Advisers Discuss Processing Levy or Similar Type.

Special farm taxes to finance the Administration's proposed 1938 crop-control program, to prevent further strain on the President's budget-balancing hopes, yesterday became the pivot of a White House round-table discussion between Congressional leaders and Mr. Roosevelt's fiscal advisers.

The President and Chairman Robert L. Doughton of the House Ways and Means Committee, confined themselves to the simple announcement that taxes were discussed in general and in connection with the proposed ever-normal granary program.

In other quarters it was learned that a method was sought to apply processing or similar taxes to finance the program, possibly in a separate revenue measure.

Conflict Arises Over Levies.

Conflict already has arisen at the Capitol on proposals to remove the new farm levies from the pending crop bill, and convert them into the general Treasury revenues, from which farm funds would be drawn.

A preliminary House print of the farm bill provides for excise or processing taxes on major commodities, to make the new program self-financing. The Farm Bureau Federation bill, which is expected to be largely revived in the Senate, makes no provision for processing taxes which were invalidated under the old AAA act.

Senators James P. Pope, of Idaho, and George McGill, of Kansas, (Democrats), yesterday reiterated their opposition to processing taxes. They said if such taxes are employed at all, they should be authorized in separate legislation. But Chairman Marvin Jones, of the House Agriculture Committee, has insisted on inclusion of the levies, which he calls "tariff equalizing taxes," in the farm bill proper.

Agreement Made Unlikely.

Meantime, controversy over these and so-called compulsory control features applied to individual commodities made unlikely any full agreement on either a House or Senate farm bill by the opening of the special session November 15. But both houses are bound by resolution to make farm legislation their first order of business.

Opposition of the oldest farm organization to some of the features of the new program appeared imminent, as the National Grange, representing more than 1,000,000 farmers, gathered at Harrisburg, Pa., for its seventy-first annual convention today. National Grange leaders split with the Administration last session on major features of the proposed farm program.

Attending yesterday's White House conference on financing the new program were Secretaries Morgenthau and Wallace, Undersecretary of the Treasury Roswell Magill, Acting Budget Director Daniel W. Bell, Representative Doughton, Representative Jones, and Representative Fred M. Vinson (Democrat), of Kentucky, chairman of the House Ways and Means tax sub-committee.

Working for Washington

Etta Taggart's Civic Career Began When Unit Barred Her

ETTA TAGGART.

Organized Own Citizens Group After Association Closed Doors to Her Because She Was Woman; Wants Representative for D. C.

Riled by refusal of the Georgetown Citizens Association to admit women members, Attorney Etta Taggart, fresh from law school, pitched in and organized her own civic group. This was in 1925 and she has been organizing things in Washington ever since.

In May, 1932, she organized the Washingtonians, of which group she now is both the active and honorary head. She was the first president and upon her retirement at the end of one term was made honorary president for life. Then last year they elected her president again.

The Washingtonians is a city-wide organization interested in local affairs and in "affording an opportunity of social contact." It has around 125 members, who have consistently gone on record in favor of national representation for the District—which is one of Miss Taggart's special interests.

"I'm personally interested in local suffrage, but I believe it is absolutely necessary to have national representation first. I don't believe we will ever get anywhere with our governmental problems until we have representatives in the Senate and House," she declares.

Historian's Daughter.

Miss Taggart is the daughter of the late Hugh Taggart, prominent District citizen, who wrote the history of Georgetown. He was a lawyer and his five sons were lawyers. There was no reason why one of his five daughters should not also study law, so when the future organizer of the Portia Club got tired of the frills that go with a debut she delved into the mysteries of Blackstone—and found them exceedingly interesting.

"I'm so glad I studied law. I love my practice, especially the probate work, and I can choose my own friends from among many interesting groups," she asserts.

She has been practicing law for 13 years, and is known around town as being "plenty good." In the same office with her now, but not in partnership, is Paul D. Taggart, one of her brothers. She wears her hat while at work, has laughing blue-gray eyes, and is a quick and chatty talker. She was a charter member and at one time a secretary of the Southern Society, the parties of which she has greatly enjoyed because of the good dancing privileges they provided.

Worked for NRA.

Miss Taggart organized the women of the District during the days of the NRA, enlisting their co-operation in putting Blue Eagle provisions across in Washington.

She is a member of the Society of Natives of the District of Columbia and is a delegate to the Federation of Citizens Associations from the Progressive Citizens Association, which is the civic group she organized to vindicate the "outraged civic feeling" of the women in Geirgetown. She is also honorary prisident for life of the Progressive body, which—let it be put into the record—admits men to its membership and is very glad to have them.

At the federation Miss Taggart is chairman of the national representation committee.

She will admit to no "hobbies," except law and citizenship work, although she does say she likes a good game of bridge and good music.

ON FRIDAY—George A. Corbin, new president of Manor Park Citizens Association, will be next in the "Working for Washington" series.

Credit Union Talk Slated.

E. J. Hickey, of the Credit Union Section, Farm Credit Administration, will address a meeting of the elementary and high school representatives of the District Teachers' Federal Credit Union at 4 p. m. tomorrow in the Franklin Administration Building. John Paul Collins, principal of Anacostia Junior-Senior High School, will preside.

Rail Creditors Are Criticized As Apathetic

Truman, at Inquiry, Assails Failure to Inspect Plan for Reorganization.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Truman (Democrat), Missouri, acting chairman of the Senate Railroad Finance Committee, criticized major creditors of the Missouri Pacific Railroad yesterday for what he said was failure to "go to the bottom" of the insolvent railroad's proposal for reorganization.

The Missouri Senator told officers of two of the Nation's largest life insurance companies it was a "peculiar situation when all the big insurance companies and others having a financial interest haven't gone to the bottom of this reorganization plan. It seems to me you should have had all the information on it before you made any deals."

Committee investigators have contended that "loopholes" in the debtor plan would give control of the railroad after reorganization to the same interests which they charged had engaged in undesirable practice before receivership.

Committee investigators contended that previous evidence had shown Missouri Pacific had obtained $17,000,000 in loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with "false" balance sheets.

Under the railroad's reorganization plan, twelve of eighteen members of the board of directors would be nominated by Missouri Pacific, and six by the creditors. The investigators contended Alleghany, the top Van Swearingen holding company, would actually nominate the twelve representing Missouri Pacific.

Meyers and Ecker asserted the plan would give the creditors control of the road's financial affairs through majority membership on a finance committee of five. Committee investigators said actually the finance committee would not have jurisdiction over some financial matters.

President Urges Quick Replies in Jobless Census

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt appealed to all unemployed and "partly unemployed" yesterday to answer by November 20 the questions to be asked them on census cards distributed by postmen.

His plea was preliminary to a radio talk Sunday evening on the jobless count.

"A highly important task which confronts our Nation today," the President said, "is finding jobs for willing workers who through no fault of their own, are unable to find work for which they are suited.

"The problem is both social and economic. Our mental well being requires the removal of fear from the minds of those below the border line of necessity. Our economic well being calls for the stimulus that wages, paid in exchange for productive labor, will add to our national income.

"To put all willing workers to work calls for long-term planning. Long-term planning calls for facts.

Three Companies Renew Black Fight

By the Associated Press.

Three Florida oil corporations filed a new allegation before the Supreme Court yesterday that Justice Hugo L. Black was not qualified to act in their case.

The court had denied a petition for a rehearing of its action in refusing to review a judgment against the corporations by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The second request for a rehearing said "the participation of Justice Black . . . rendered this court an illegally constituted court insofar as the matters upon which he participated are concerned."

N. Y. Commissioner Tells Seminar 'Experts' Add Confusion.

By Howard F. Wentworth.
A Staff Correspondent.

New York, Nov. 9.—A sound program to promote highway safety and solve traffic problems must have co-operation between press and police, Col. Harold Fowler, deputy police commissioner of New York, told today's session of the Commercial Investment Trust Seminar of Safety.

Every city attempting to combat death on its streets is overrun with "traffic experts" who add confusion by suggestions, Col. Fowler declared.

"The average citizen considers himself an authority on traffic matters," he told newspapermen at the seminar, "but he usually doesn't know what he is talking about.

Credits Publicity Effect.

Widespread publicity, he reported, resulted in New Yorks recent "safe city" citation from the National Safety Council.

Col. Fowler assailed the practice of using unlettered and unidentified police cars. This system, now used in Washington by the traffic division, was described by Col. Fowler as a "trap." He agreed, however, that some action should be taken against the driver who disobeys rules and regulations because there isn't a police car in sight.

Asserting careless pedestrians create one of this city's greatest problems, the deputy commissioner urged urban centers to "fight for a program to control pedestrian traffic."

Washington was pointed out as a typical city having no rules to govern the pedestrian. Until such a program is adopted by every major community, Col. Fowler declared the country's death and injury toll will continue to mount.

Activities of motor vehicle administrators were described to the seminar by Lew Wallace, commissioner of the Iowa Motor Vehicle Department.

Urges Traffic Diagnosis.

Traffic problems, he said, should be treated as a physician treats his patient—the disease must be diagnosed and a prescription offered.

Wallace appealed to the newspapermen:

"Help us sell to the public what we are trying to do because it will mean the saving of thousands of lives, millions of dollars, tens of thousands of permanent cripples and unlimited unhappiness to the citizens of the country."

Necessity for uniform national legislation to battle the traffic problem was argued by A. W. Koehler, secretary of the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators.

At least one of the 50 newspapermen from all sections of the country here to attend sessions of the seminar knows the "real story" behind tragic highway accidents.

A year ago, almost to the hour when he arrived from Duluth, Minn., A. B. Kapplin, reporter for the Duluth Herald and News Tribune, recounted how his young wife was killed in a crash near his home.

Himself injured in the wreck, Kapplin spent many agonizing weeks in a hospital. His car was sidewiped by a negligent speeding motorist. He has decided to spend the remainder of his life helping rid the highways of death.

2 Homeless Boys Burned to Death In Baltimore Fire

Baltimore, Nov. 9 (AP).—Two waifs were burned fatally today in a factory where they sought shelter.

The boys, William and Andrew Olszewski, 13 and 15, were found three hours after the fire. Their uncle, Harry Olszewski, said their father sailed on the freighter Algic recently after most of its regular crew was jailed on mutiny charges as a result of a "sit-down" strike in a South American port.

The uncle said he did not know where their mother was.

Flier Kills Wife And Best Friend In 'White Rage'

Awoke to Find Them in Embrace, Air Terminal Head Says.

By the Associated Press.

Glendale, Calif., Nov. 9.—Paul A. Wright, 38-year-old aviation executive, shot dead his young wife and his best friend, John Bryant Kimmel, early today when, he told authorities, he found them in each other's arms in the Wright home.

Wright related to Police Chief V. B. Browne that he discovered his comely 28-year-old wife embracing Kimmel, also a married man, when he arose from a nap. Wright is president of Union Air Terminal and Kimmel was traffic manager.

Earlier Wright and Kimmel returned from a round of night-clubbing in Hollywood, involving initiation of a new member into the "Quiet Birdmen's Club" and a visit to Clara Bow's "It" Club.

Wife Waited Up.

Kimmel died at a hospital eight hours after the shooting, which occurred about 4 a. m. Mrs. Wright, the former Evelyn McBride, society editor of a Detroit newspaper and Chicago actress, was dead upon arrival of police.

"My wife had a jealous attitude toward me," Wright told police. "So I asked Kimmel to drive me home last night—to explain to my wife where we had been.

"She was waiting up for me when we got home. I had another drink and then decided to take a nap . . . When I got up I saw them on the piano bench, their arms around each other.

"I said 'Well, what's all this?' Evelyn laughed and kissed Kimmel again.

"Everything Went White."

"Everything went white before my eyes—like a sheet of white fire. I ran and got my gun and shot them."

Kimmel, 32, married Maureen Mitchell, a former United Airlines hostess, two years ago. He was a former naval flier at Pensacola, Fla. Wright, Artillery officer in the World War, formerly was assistant to the president of United Airlines.

Blonde young Mrs. Kimmel was with her husband when he died.

Mrs. Wright was the mother of another daughter, Joan, 6½, by a previous marriage to Clark Branion, Detroit advertising man. Joan has been adopted by Mrs. Wright's father, a wealthy businessman.

Fear of Riot Bars Red Celebration

Seattle, Nov. 9 (AP).—On the strength of an affidavit expressing fear of riots, the superior court today upheld Mayor John F. Dore's cancellation of a lease on the Civic Auditorium to the Communist Party for an armistice eve mass meeting.

Cutting short an argument over "subversive activities," Judge Calvin S. Hall denied the Communists a writ.

Boy Kills Himself In Demonstration Of Honor Suicide

Hollywood, Nov. 9 (AP).—Carroll S. Anderson, 15, offered to show 11-year-old Robert Bellow how a dishonored imperial Czarist guardsman would kill himself.

"Carroll put one bullet in the gun and whirled the cylinder," Robert related to police.

"You see," he said, "the Russians always had five chances out of six not to be killed."

The sixth chance sent a bullet through Carroll's brain. He fell dead.

Mountain Girl Charges Groom, 45, Already Had a Wife.

A correspondence club romance which culminated a year ago in the marriage of a pretty 13-year-old Tennessee mountain girl and a 45-year-old Washington resident went on the rocks yesterday. Charging that her husband, Peter Miodusewski, already had a wife when he married her, Orene Tyner, who now is 14, asked the District Court to annual her marriage.

Because of the girl's youth, the suit was filed through Marie Allen (Mrs. Homer Allen), 832 D street southeast, proprietress of the boarding house where the Miodusewskis lived for six weeks after their marriage. In her complaint, the girl stated she was married September 19, 1936, in Benton County, Tenn., and was born March 21, 1923, in Camden, Tenn.

She described her husband as an attendant at St. Elizabeths Hospital. He lives at 830 D street, next door to Mrs. Allen's residence. Orene now makes her home with a Georgia avenue couple, who employ her as a domestic.

The suit disclosed that soon after the marriage the Miodusewskis came here, and that the girl-wife left her husband about a month ago. The suit charged the husband "is taking advantage of his age to browbeat and annoy the girl plaintiff and had threatened her with physical violence unless she returns to him."

Windsor to Miss Rites at Tomb of Unknown Soldier

There's a "hole" in Armistice Day ceremonies at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington Cemetery because the duke of Windsor will not be present.

This "hole" Lieut. Col. John T. Harris, Q. M. C., who is in charge of the program, said last night, will be plugged before the ceremoniese begin.

"As a matter of fact," said he, "we'll have more applications for time on the program than we can fill."

The duke was scheduled to appear between 4 p. m. and 4:30 p. m. Thursday. What he was to have done is not clear; the program says simply, "Reserved for the Duke of Windsor."

Invalidation Asked For Reno Divorce

Claiming she had not been legally divorced from Dr. W. Marion Falls, when she obtained a Reno, Nev., decree, Mrs. Dorothy W. Falls, 1721 Twenty-first street northwest, yesterday in District Court asked that the dentist's subsequent marriage to another woman be declared invalid and that she be granted a limited divorce.

Mrs. Falls based her complaint on the allegation that her divorce was obtained in Reno under a "simulated" residence and was for that reason invalid.

Legal Moves Halt 'P.-R.' Vote Tally

New York, Nov. 9 (AP).—A quagmire of legal complications tonight bogged down the Nation's biggest city's first venture in a relatively unexplored new field of voting—proportional representation.

The "P. R." system—bitterly opposed by the majority Democratic machine, which controls the board of elections, and championed by "reform" elements headed by victorious Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia—was adopted in order to give effective legislative representation to minorities in the new and powerful city council.

Tonight the complicated system of tallying the "P. R." vote, which is costing the city $20,000 a day and may not be completed by Thanksgiving, had reached a crisis in the five boroughs here.

Government payments in connection with soil conservation and other farm adjustment programs totaled $350,000,000.

U.S. Coal Group Split by Fight To Expel Chief

Lewis Says Hosford Sits Illegally After Resigning for Personal Business.

By the United Press.

The National Bituminous Coal Commission controversy flared up anew last night when the commission split evenly on a resolution of John C. Lewis, a member, to declare the office of the chairman vacant.

Chairman Charles F. Hosford, jr., recently submitted his resignation to the President, ho called the commission in for a conference last Friday after receiving Hosford's resignation, but has not yet accepted it.

Hosford said, it was understood, that he would stay until the commission finishes fixing minimum prices for the industry.

Commissioner Lewis, with Commissioners Percy Tetlow and Pleas Greenlee, voted for the resolution. Commissioners Thomas Haymond, C. E. Smith and Walter H. Maloney, Lewis' office said, voted against it. Hosford refrained from voting, and the motion died.

Lewis submitted a memorandum saying Hosford had said he was quitting because of personal business and charging Hosford did not have a legal right to sit on the commission.

"We cannot prevent or object to his accepting such employment," Lewis memorandum said after noting that Hosford was allegedly to accept a coal job, "but we do object to his continuing to remain as a member of this commission and as its chairman if he intends to be connected with the coal industry in the immediate future."

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Piano recital by Margaret C. Tolson at the Arts Club Tuesday night. Program: "Concerto in the Italian Style" (Bach), "Kreisleriana" (Schumann), "Voiles" and "Poissons d'Or" (Debussy), "Flammes Sombres" (Skryabin), "The Tug" and "The Liner" from "Ships" (Goossens).

Upon Margaret Tolson one can usually depend for interesting piano playing, and her performance last night before members and guests of the Arts Club was no exception to the rule. The reason that her readings engross one's attention is simple; she never uses her competent technique superficially, but directs it with intelligence at the core of a composition. She plays with a conviction based on definite concepts of musical meaning, and there are no empty notes in her phrasing. Her emotional impulses are strong, but firmly curbed from either sentimentality or extravagance.

Of Bach's Italianate concerto she gave a forthright and animated reading completely devoid of the dryness with which that essentially romantic work is frequently dusted. She treated it not as though it were an exhibit of classical archeology, but as living music fresh from the mind of its genial creator.

To the neglected "Kreisleriana" of Robert Schumann she applied herself with the zeal of an advocate. How the idea ever got into circulation that this imaginative suite of fantasies suffers from lack of motivation is more or less of a mystery. Perhaps it is because so few people nowadays read the bizarre tales and the penetrative musical criticism of E. T. A. Hoffman, alias Kapellmeister Johannes Kreisler. Jean Paul Richter and Hoffmann were Schumann's favorite authors; to the former he paid tribute in "Davidsbundlertanze" and "Carnaval," and to the latter in "Kreisleriana."

In her final group, Miss Tolson brought together four modern tone-painters for the piano. Debussy was represented by "Voiles" from the first book of preludes and "Poissons d'Or" from the second set of "Images." A glimpse at the yearning mysticism of Skryabin was afforded in the flickerings of "Flammes Sombres." The fanciful conceits of Eugene Goossens—the bumptious and bustling "Tug" and the noisy, tourist-laden "Liner"—were aquarelles in the pointilliste manner.

President Calls Nation to Join InThanksgving

Proclamation Stresses the Bountiful Harvests, Will for Peace.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt called upon the country yesterday to give thanks November 25 for "abundant harvests and the blessing of stable employment" to many people.

In a Thanksgiving Day proclamation, he called attention also to strife and war threats in many parts of the world while the United States enjoys peace and cherishes "no selfish designs against other nations."

The proclamation said:

"I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, hereby designate Thursday, the 25th day of November, 1937, as a day of national thanksgiving.

"The custom of observing a day of public thanksgiving began in colonial times and has been given the sanction of national observance through many years. It is in keeping with all of our traditions that we, even as our fathers in olden days, give humble and hearty thanks for the bounty and goodness of Divine Providence.

"The harvests of our fields have been abundant and many men and women have been given the blessing of stable employment.

"A period unhappily marked in many parts of the world by strife and threats of war finds our people enjoying the blessing of peace. We have no selfish designs against other nations.

"We have been fortunate in devoting our energies and our resources to constructive purposes and useful works. We have sought to fulfill our obligation to use our national heritage by common effort for the common good.

"Let us, therefore, on the day appointed forego our usual occupations and, in our accustomed places of worship, each in his own way, humbly acknowledge the mercy of God from whom comes every good and perfect gift."

O'Conor Will Use Plane in Drive

Baltimore, Nov. 9 (AP).—Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor opened campaign headquarters today, accepted the loan of an airplane, and announced he would "make a business man's" fight for the 1938 Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

His year of concentrated vote-hunting, between now and election day next November is so arranged that "it won't interfere in any respect with my official duties," he said.

The airplane, he admitted today, was an unexpected touch. He won't begin to use it until the battle gets thick and speaking engagements begin to pile up on him. When he does start flying, however, he plans to finish out his working day here and hop to dinner speeches in Cumberland, Salisbury or Leonardtown.

Japan Will Crush China or Collapse Trying, Says Wei

Hostilities in China will cease only when China has been completely crushed or when Japan collapses, Dr. Francis C. M. Wei, presidetn of Central China College and visiting professor of ethics at Harvard, told the Washington Yale Club yesterday.

"The combined efforts of the League of Nations the Nine-Power Conference at Brussels and popular opinion of the world will have little or no effect on Japan's aggression in China" he stated.

China has been willing to co-operate with all nations to preserve peace in the Orient but "Japan wants to dominate and hence China can not co-operate with them," Dr. Wei explained.

Although Shanghai has fallen, it will be a long time before the strong defenses inland give up the struggle, he said.

Friendship Sought With Italy, Reich, Chamberlain Says

London, Nov. 9 (AP).—Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain declared tonight Great Britain sincerely desired to reach an agreement with Italy and Germany "on a basis of mutual friendship and understanding."

In a cautiously-worded speech at the banquet marking inauguration of Sir Harry Twyford as Lord Mayor of London, Chamberlain reaffirmed his desire for Anglo-American cooperation and said:

"As regards our relations with the two great powers which are so closely associated now in what is known as the Rome-Berlin axis, I will only say this: It is the sincere desire of his majesty's government to see those relations firmly established on a basis of mutual friendship and understanding."

Business Lag Laid To Aluminum Co.

By the Associated Press.

Robert H. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General, told the Supreme Court yesterday that the Aluminm Co. of America had contributed toward retarding busines recovery early this year.

The company, he said, had raised the price of its product and thereby had "discouraged the building industry insofar as aluminum was used in that industry."

Jackson, in charge of the Justice Department's antitrust division, was arguing in support of the Government's dissolution proceedings against the company in the Southern New York Federal District Court.

William Watson Smith, attorney for the company, contended if any proceedings are brought they should be filed before the Federal District Court at Pittsburgh, where a consent decree against the company was entered in 1912.

"The Government," he added, "cannot put us to the peril of two decrees in separate courts. It cannot choose a second forum in which to try the issues."

Farley Urges Unity At Special Session

By the Associated Press.

James A. Farley called last night for Democratic support of President Roosevelt's special session program.

Broadcasting to Young Democratic clubs celebrating the fifth anniversary of the President's election, he declared:

"If the Democratic Party fails to do the things that must be done, the task will be turned over to other leadership because the American people will no longer tolerate inaction."

Earlier, President Roosevelt said in a letter to the members that the interest they are showing in government "is one of the most hopeful signs of the times."

"Our task," the President wrote, "is to find a new approach to the solution of age-old problems, a solution which involves the happiness and security of every person living. We must examine anew the political, social and economic sciences to see what readjustments are necessary to insure the well-being of all of our people."

Roosevelt Against Pension Fund Cut

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt declared yesterday that it would be dangerous to put the old age pension system on a "pay-as-you-go" basis immediately because the Government would go broke without an adequate reserve to pay benefits in future years.

Thsu he replied, at a press conference, to critics who contend that the present reserve fund will amount to $47,000,000,000 by 1980 and that it is unnecessary for workers and employers to contribute such a sum in taxes.

The reserve fnd is a problem, the President conceded, but he said he thought contributions to it should be maintained at the present level for the time being. The fund may not reach proportions predicted, he continued, and there is no reason why Congress cannot work out a permanent social security law by revising the present act as experience shows the need.

THE FEDERAL DIARY

By Scott Hart.

Statistics.

The fluctuations on the mile-long roll of Uncle Sam's workers are offered, as of September, by the Civil Service Commission, and dealing with civil employment and payrolls in the executive branch of the Government are highlighted as follows:

There were two sizable increases in employment during September, the War Department adding 1,452 in the Engineer Department at Large, and the TVA adding 862. The increases were principally in employes engaged in force-account work. . . . The following significant decreases in employment occurred in the agencies named: Agriculture, 5,304—chiefly in Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, the Forest Service and the FSA; Department of Interior, 1,348, these mostly seasonal decreases in National Park Service and the Alaska Road Commission; and the WPA, 1,802. The latter decline was due chiefly to the decline in the number of persons engaged in relief projects.

. . There were 836,173 employes in the executive branch of Government during September, a decrease of 6,909 since August. The September payroll was $125,897,930 as compared with $126,541,673 a month ago, a decline of over $640,000 or one-half of one per cent.

There was an increase in employment of 17 in the District of Columbia and a decrease of 6,926 outside the District, bringing the total number of employes in the District to 111,608 and the total outside the District to 724,565.

Ball Plans.

A number of Government departments have contributed committeemen who are making plans for the 19th annual Armistice Day Ball to be held by the Veterans of Foreign Wars in the Willard Hotel tomorrow night. David Herman, Department commander, is with the Internal Revenue Department. Others are:

H. C. Kelso, United States Army; Norman Edwards, Bureau of Engraving; John G. Strobel, Weather Bureau; Frank Topah, Navy; Frank R. Heise, War; Harry R. Shilling, Postoffice; Howard Woerner, Veterans' Bureau; William A. Downs, Navy Yard; Nathan D. Golden, Commerce; Paul L. Hutchins, Red Cross; Albert E. Forester, Postoffice; George Ridgeway, Engraving; Earl O. Henry, Internal Revenue; Asbury B. Hammond, Veterans' Bureau; Frank Hagen, Engraving; Jay D. Coulter, Veterans, and T. F. Campbell, Secretary Woodring is honorary chairman of the ball.

The American Federation of Labor expresses itself officially on the 5-day week issue:

". . . the cost of the 5-day week, whether it be $60,000,000 annually or $100,000,000, is a bagatelle compared with the realization of, at least an approach to justice for around half a million of faithful employes who are responsible for the efficient functioning of the important activities of the Government in multitudinous fields affecting all our citizens. When to this equity for those already employed there is the added justice of providing a large number of unemployed workers with employment at wages sufficient to support themselves and their dependents in comparative comfort, there can be no logical argument against the reduction in hours. It is hoped that President Roosevelt will include this beneficial legislation in his message to the next Congress and also incorporate the financial provisions necessary for mechanizing the plan in his budget message."

The Federation evidently thinks that the cost will amount to the unofficially estimated "$60,000,000 to $100,000,000." Many employes think the cost would be tremendously less. They argue that there is very little difference between a five and one-half day week, which is current, and the proposed five-day week. They seem to think that if the employes were handled with greater efficiency the work now being done in five and one-half days could—without straining capacities too much—be performed in five days. Of course, they do not include all phases of the work in the supposition; they were speaking of the work in the Government's service as a whole.

And most all of them are apprehensive lest a five-day week be established and hours lengthened. The general feeling among employes is that they had rather forego a five-day week than to have the practice of overtime pressed any more than it is right now.

House Group Votes to Ease Levy on Gains

Sub-committee Favors Plan to Carry Over Capital Loss for Deduction.

the law," Chairman Fred M. Vinson said.

No Redress Now.

A typical example of how yesterday's approved change in the capital gains tax would operate, was outlined by one House tax expert as follows:

A property holder realizes a gain of $5,000 from sales of stock, but suffers a loss of $10,000 from disposal of other property. By deducting the gain, he has a net loss of $5,000 on the year's transactions. Under the present law, he is given an additional allowance of $2,000, which can be deducted from other income before taxes are applied. This leaves a capital loss of $3,000, on which he has no redress in taxes. Under the plan approved yesterday, he could carry this loss into the next taxable year, as an offset against gains realized in that year. But the present law's $2,000 loss allowance would not apply in the second year.

Quicker Minimum Sought.

The existing law (the revenue act of 1934) applies income taxes against net capital gains, of varying intensity, depending on the length of time the property is held before profit-taking. If the property is sold in one year or less, 100 per cent of the gain is subject to tax; if the property is held for more than a year, but less than two years before profit-taking, the gain is taxed 80 per cent; if held over two years, but not over five years, 60 per cent; over five years, but not over ten, 40 per cent, and over ten years, the minimum of 30 per cent.

In an effort to encourage the flow of capital, the House committee is considering cutting down this ten-year period to five years before the taxpayer gets maximum tax relief. It also is considering a return to the flat rate, possibly decreasing in force to the end of the proposed five-year period.

No final conclusions have been reached on these pending proposals, but the sub-committee yesterday was in definite agreement on the plan for one-year carry-over of capital losses.

According to Treasury statistics for 1936, 651,866 taxpayers, having an aggregate income of $8,712,926,000 in that year, reported $798,760,000 in capital gains, as against $287,190,000 reported in 1934.

Hull Praises MacDonald as Peace Leader

Secretary Says Briton Was in Front Rank of War Foes.

By the United Press.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull said last night that the death of Ramsay MacDonald had removed "a great leader, profound statesman and a loyal friend."

"In my association with him," Hull said, "in our individual tasks of making clear to each other the point of view of our respective countries, I have always found him a forthright and helpful representative of the great people he was privileged to lead.

"His untiring efforts for peace placed him in the front rank of those who tried to make a better world for us to live in."

News Shocks Argentine.

Buenos Aires, Nov. 9 (U.P.).—News of Ramsay MacDonald's death tonight shocked Argentine officials and members of the British colony who were preparing to welcome the former prime minister to this city.

British Ambassador Sir Esmond Ovey said MacDonald's death removed a "great personal friend of mine as well as a former chief when he was foreign secretary.

Party Efforts Remembered.

London, Nov. 9 (AP).—Former Home Minister John R. Clynes, who was a member of MacDonald's first government and was intimately associated with him in his early Labor Party days, said "although after 1931 I had very acute differences with Mr. MacDonald, I am intensely sorry to hear of his death. . . . I have the most pleasant memories of his greatness and his work. He was not only a great orator but a great organizer."

Labor Leader George Lansbury said: "I am dreadfully sorry. He was one of the pioneers of the Labor movement, and although we separated in 1931, all of us will remember what he did in the days when the movement was struggling."

Canvass Promotes SEC Rules' Repeal

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—The Association of Stock Exchange Firms is soliciting opinions from prominent corporation executives on the advisability of repealing sections of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 dealing with purchase and sale, by officers and directors, of stock of their own companies. The association, it was stated, supports the theory that if "insiders" could trade freely in their own stocks it would act as a cushion in a decline.

Ramsay MacDonald, Former Prime Minister Of Great Britain, Succumbs Suddenly at Sea

Chamberlain at No. 10 Downing street.

Praised by Baldwin.

The death of Mr. MacDonald, who has held no political influence for at least a year, was not expected to have important consequences in party circles. Although he continued as a behind-the-scenes leader of the National Laborites, this group itself is now practically fictional and it is expected that with the passing of MacDonald the group will disappear entirely.

The day after he sailed his successor, Stanley Baldwin, now Earl Baldwin, and also retired, paid tribute to MacDonald in a public address, saying "I never feel that Mr. MacDonald has had credit given him by the country due for services he rendered it in 1931 and in the years immediately succeeding."

Served Six Years.

Mr. MacDonald, England's prime minister from 1929 through six of the most eventful years of the world's history, was born October 12, 1866, in a two-room cottage in Loissiemouth, Scotland, and rose to 10 Downing street. No British subject can go further, for past 10 Downing street, the residence of the prime minister, is Buckingham Palace.

Mr. MacDonald was combined prophet, organizer and administrator of the distinctive brand of socialism that is British. It differs from the Marxian creed of Russian communists in that it is evolutionary rather than revolutionary. It denounces capitalism and communism in the same breath, supplanting the violence of class war with the doctrine of the "inevitability of gradualness" toward universal democracy.

An example of this doctrine, MacDonald was active in politics for nearly 20 years before he got to parliament; it was 18 years before he captured the highest prize in the gift of the British people.

In 1888 he entered politics and for four years was secretary to Thomas Lough, a radical candidate for parliament, receiving $375 a year. When he left Lough, MacDonald knew the inside workings of the British political machinery, was a trenchant speaker and facile writer.

Turned to Journalism.

Then he turned to journalism, joined the Independent Labor Party and the Fabian Society and became right hand man of Keir Hardie. In 1895 he tried for parliament on his own hook but a Southampton constituency gave him only 867 votes.

But that poll brought him romance, for one of the contributors to his campaign fund was "M. E. Gladstone." Investigation showed this was Margaret Ethel Gladstone, daughter of a scientist and niece of the famous Lord Kelvin. She and MacDonald were married in 1896 when he was 30.

She was a woman of wide culture, a devoted social worker. She brought her husband financial independence, a fact not generally known, and while by no means wealthy they possessed means which enabled them to spend a honeymoon in the United States, where they met Jane Addams; and to tour Australia, India and South Africa. The jaunts gave him a background of personal travel knowledge superior to that possessed by any other occupant of No. 10 Downing street.

Fifty years have passed since MacDonald left his home in Scotland to come to London. He had no friends and no job and often was hungary. His first position as a minor clerk paid $7.50 a week.

Defeated for Parliament.

From 1900 to 1911 he served as secretary of the labor representative committee, now the Labor Party of England. MacDonald sought twice unsuccessfully to enter parliament before he finally won. At the height of his parliamentary career a war-crazed nation sent him into exile—an exile that added creases in a ruddy face and changed a shock of black hair to silver.

MacDonald fought on. By 1922 he had regained his hold. Two years later he was Prime Minister. From January until November, 1924, he served in that post and then was defeated on the question of realtions with Soviet Russia.

Again in 1929 MacDonald returned to power. He succeeded the Conservative government led by Stanley Baldwin. The Labor government, faced by a huge unbalanced budget, was called upon to make economies. The crisis came in 1931. The Liberals sided with the Conservatives, and MacDonald was faced with the alternative of surrendering or resigning. He resigned and formed a National Coalition government.

Twice as Prime Minister MacDonald visited the United States. In 1929 he went to Washington to confer with President Herbert Hoover at Rapidan Camp, Va., on disarmament. This conference resulted in the London Naval Treaty. Again, in 1933, he returned to talk with President Franklin D. Roosevelt on economic problems.

Refused Lordship.

The break finally came on June 7, 1935, when MacDonald yielded the prime ministership to Stanley Baldwin and took the latter's post as lord president of the council. This new line-up was tested at the polls November 15 and MacDonald was humilated by an overwhelming defeat in his constituency. He was persuaded to stay on the cabinet and on February 3, 1936, retained his seat in parliament in a by-election as representative of the Scottish universities.

...vision Move Imperils Wage Bill's Passage

Split Growing in House as Mrs. Norton, Connor Disagree on Plan.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

Sharp differences among House members last night jeopardized chances of final passage of the Black-Connery minimum wage and maximum hour bill at the coming special session of Congress and drastic revision appeared certain.

A maneuver developed among House Labor Committee members to withdraw the controversial measure, a keystone of President Roosevelt's special session program, from the House Rules Committee, where bitter Southern opposition stymied it last session.

Chairman John J. O'Connor (Democrat), New York, of the House Rules Committee, warned that withdrawal of the bill from his group for revision might jeopardize passage.

Mrs. Norton for Revision.

Chairman Mary T. Norton (Democrat), New Jersey, of the House Labor Committee, indicated, however, she favored revision. She said many industries had been demanding rehearings in view of changes that were made after the original bill was introduced.

Some returning Congressmen said the current recession in business has drawn support from the bill, members fearing it would be unwise to saddle industry with additional burdens and regulations until extent of the slump is known.

O'Connor Fears Delay.

"I have seen reports that some members of the Labor Committee are planning to withdraw the bill from my committee," O'Connor said. "I hope they do not. It will delay final action and jeopardize its chances at the special session.

"Personally, I favor the bill. Any changes that are needed can be offered from the House floor as amendments."

He said he hoped to break the deadlock in his committee to insure floor consideration.

Representative Albert Thomas (Democrat), Texas, House Labor Committee member, said he thought efforts would be made to withdraw the bill from the Rules Committee for revision to curtail powers of the proposed labor standards board and provide "some sort of exemption" for small industries operating on a "close margin of profit."

'Martyrs' Lauded By Hitler as Nazi Putsch Is Recalled

Munich, Nov. 9 (AP).—Nazi Germany today observed the fourteenth anniversary of the unsuccessful beer cellar putsch of 1923.

Chancellor Adolph Hitler praised accomplishments of his regime, resulting "first in establishment of a European axis (Italy and Germany) and afterward of a world triangle" (Italy, Germany and Japan).

Hitler and other party leaders marched from historic Buergenbraeu to Field Marshal's Hall before which the first Nazi blood was spilled.

There they took part in the roll call of "martyrs" to the cause, in which 275 names of party members who died from 1924 to 1936 were called out. Seven who died in the Spanish civil war were added to the list.

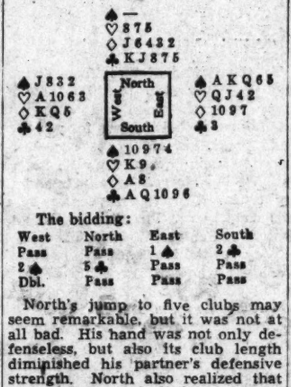
Exploring All Possibilities.

The best players are those who allow themselves the greatest number of opportunities for success. The expert often spends a good deal of time in planning the play of an apparently easy hand. He considers the various lines of play which may produce the desired number of tricks and tries to arrive at a correct order of play. As soon as it becomes apparent that one method will not succeed, he proceeds on another line. South's mistake in the hand below is that he failed to explore the winning possibility.

West, dealer.
East-West vulnerable.



The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	2 ♣
2 ♠	5 ♣	Pass	Pass
Dbl.	Pass	Pass	Pass

North's jump to five clubs may seem remarkable, but it was not at all bad. His hand was not only defenseless, but also its club length diminished his partner's defensive strength. North also realized that his partner had little defensive strength since he had failed to make a takeout double. It was probable, therefore, that the opponents could make four spades and that North would be compelled eventually to go to five clubs as a sacrifice. The advantage of bidding five clubs immediately was that the opponents probably would not be able to consider the possibility of bidding five spades—a contingency which North feared.

West opened the deuce of spades, dummy ruffing. South got to his hand with the Ace of diamonds and ruffed another spade. A low diamond was then won by West's Queen. West led a third round of spades and dummy ruffed again.

At this point South decided that his best play was to ruff a fourth spade and play East for the Ace of hearts. He therefore returned to his hand with a trump, ruffed his last spade and led a heart. Naturally, he lost two hearts, in addition to the diamond trick lost earlier.

South's mistake was in not exploring the diamond situation. After ruffing the third spade it could have cost him nothing to return to his hand with a diamond ruff instead of with a trump. In that case he would have noticed the favorable break and could have cashed the Ace and King of trumps. Dummy's long diamonds would have produced his quota of 11 tricks.

SWEET-BEER DRINKERS FAST DISAPPEARING

People who prefer sweet beer still exist. But there are mighty few of them left. During Prohibition, when home brew and needle beer were made by adding sugar and raisins to malt and hops, it was these sweet concoctions or no beer. But since repeal, wherever dry beers have been sold, they have quickly become the popular leaders.

So it's not surprising that Gunther's dry beery beer is far and away the favorite in this part of the country. Experienced beer drinkers prefer Gunther's because it is made after the manner of the finest imported Bohemian or Pilsener brews—its dry beery tang comes largely from the choicest imported hops. A "Special Dry Lager," Gunther's is the type of beer that most of your guests prefer. And now that it is packed in its distinctive new cans and bottles, you will be proud to serve it to anybody, anywhere. But why wait until your next party? Order a case of Gunther's now and find out for yourself how good a dry beery beer can be. Gunther Brewing Company, Baltimore, Md.

House Group Votes to Ease Levy on Gains

Sub-committee Favors Plan to Carry Over Capital Loss for Deduction.

the law," Chairman Fred M. Vinson said.

No Redress Now.

A typical example of how yesterday's approved change in the capital gains tax would operate, was outlined by one House tax expert as follows:

A property holder realizes a gain of $5,000 from sales of stock, but suffers a loss of $10,000 from disposal of other property. By deducting the gain, he has a net loss of $5,000 on the year's transactions. Under the present law, he is given an additional allowance of $2,000, which can be deducted from other income before taxes are applied. This leaves a capital loss of $3,000, on which he has no redress in taxes. Under the plan approved yesterday, he could carry this loss into the next taxable year, as an offset against gains realized in that year. But the present law's $2,000 loss allowance would not apply in the second year.

Quicker Minimum Sought.

The existing law (the revenue act of 1934) applies income taxes against net capital gains, of varying intensity, depending on the length of time the property is held before profit-taking. If the property is sold in one year or less, 100 per cent of the gain is subject to tax; if the property is held for more than a year, but less than two years before profit-taking, the gain is taxed 80 per cent; if held over two years, but not over five years, 60 per cent; over five years, but not over ten, 40 per cent, and over ten years, the minimum of 30 per cent.

In an effort to encourage the flow of capital, the House committee is considering cutting down this ten-year period to five years before the taxpayer gets maximum tax relief. It also is considering a return to the flat rate, possibly decreasing in force to the end of the proposed five-year period.

No final conclusions have been reached on these pending proposals, but the sub-committee yesterday was in definite agreement on the plan for one-year carry-over of capital losses.

According to Treasury statistics for 1936, 651,866 taxpayers, having an aggregate income of $8,712,926,000 in that year, reported $798,760,000 in capital gains, as against $287,190,000 reported in 1934.

Hull Praises MacDonald as Peace Leader

Secretary Says Briton Was in Front Rank of War Foes.

By the United Press.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull said last night that the death of Ramsey MacDonald had removed "a great leader, profound statesman and a loyal friend."

"In my association with him," Hull said, "in our individual tasks of making clear to each other the point of view of our respective countries, I have always found him a forthright and helpful representative of the great people he was privileged to lead.

"His untiring efforts for peace placed him in the front rank of those who tried to make a better world for us to live in."

I have the most pleasant memories of his greatness and his work. He was not only a great orator but a great organizer."

Chamberlain at No. 10 Downing street.

Praised by Baldwin.

The death of Mr. MacDonald, who has held no political influence for at least a year, was not expected to have important consequences in party circles. Although he continued as a behind-the-scenes leader of the National Laborites, this group itself is now practically fictional and it is expected that with the passing of MacDonald the group will disappear entirely.

The day after he sailed his successor, Stanley Baldwin, now Earl Baldwin, and also retired, paid tribute to MacDonald in a public address, saying "I never feel that Mr. MacDonald has had credit given him by the country due for services he rendered it in 1931 and in the years immediately succeeding."

Served Six Years.

Mr. MacDonald, England's prime minister from 1929 through six of the most eventful years of the worud's history, was born October 12, 1866, in a two-room cottage in Loissiemouth, Scotland, and rose to 10 Downing street. No British subject can go further, for past 10 Downing street, the residence of the prime minister, is Buckingham Palace.

Mr. MacDonald was combined prophet, organizer and administrator of the distinctive brand of socialism that is British. It differs from the Marxian creed of Russian communists in that it is evolutionary rather than revolutionary. It denounces capitalism and communism in the same breath, supplanting the violence of class war with the doctrine of the "inevitability of gradualness" toward universal democracy.

An example of this doctrine, MacDonald was active in politics for nearly 20 years before he got to parliament; it was 18 years before he captured the highest prize in the gift of the British people.

In 1888 he entered politics and for four years was secretary to Thomas Lough, a radical candidate for parliament, receiving $375 a year. When he left Lough, MacDonald knew the inside workings of the British political machinery, was a trenchant speaker and facile writer.

Turned to Journalism.

Then he turned to journalism, joined the Independent Labor Party and the Fabian Society and became right hand man of Keir Hardie. In 1895 he tried for parliament on his own hook but a Southampton constituency gave him only 867 votes.

But that poll brought him romance, for one of the contributors to his campaign fund was "M. E. Gladstone." Investigation showed this was Margaret Ethel Gladstone, daughter of a scientist and niece of the famous Lord Kelvin. She and MacDonald were married in 1896 when he was 30.

She was a woman of wide culture, a devoted social worker. She brought her husband financial independence, a fact not generally known, and while by no means wealthy they possessed means which enabled them to spend a honeymoon in the United States, where they met Jane Addams; and to tour Australia, India and South Africa. The jaunts gave him a background of personal travel knowledge superior to that possessed by any other occupant of No. 10 Downing street.

Fifty years have passed since MacDonald left his home in Scotland to come to London. He had no friends and no job and often was hungary. His first position as a minor clerk paid $7.50 a week.

Defeated for Parliament.

From 1900 to 1911 he served as secretary of the labor representative committee, now the Labor Party of England. MacDonald sought twice unsuccessfully to enter parliament before he finally won. At the height of his parliamentary career a warcrazed nation sent him into exile—an exile that added creases in a ruddy face and changed a shock of black hair to silver.

MacDonald fought on. By 1922 he had regained his hold. Two years later he was Prime Minister. From January until November, 1924, he served in that post and then was defeated on the question of realtions with Soviet Russia.

Again in 1929 MacDonald returned to power. He succeeded the Conservative government led by Stanley Baldwin. The Labor government, faced by a huge unbalanced budget, was called upon to make economies. The crisis came in 1931. The Liberals sided with the Conservatives, and MacDonald was faced with the alternative of surrendering or resigning. He resigned and formed a National Coalition government.

Twice as Prime Minister MacDonald visited the United States. In 1929 he went to Washington to confer with President Herbert Hoover at Rapidan Camp, Va., on disarmament. This conference resulted in the London Naval Treaty. Again, in 1933, he returned to talk with President Franklin D. Roosevelt on economic problems.

Refused Lordship.

The break finally came on June 7, 1935, when MacDonald yielded the prime ministership to Stanley Baldwin and took the latter's post as lord president of the council. This new line-up was tested at the polls November 15 and MacDonald was humilated by an overwhelming defeat in his constituency. He was persuaded to stay on the cabinet and on February 3, 1936, retained his seat in parliament in a by-election as representative of the Scottish universities.

...vision Move Imperils Wage Bill's Passage

Split Growing in House as Mrs. Norton, Connor Disagree on Plan.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

Sharp differences among House members last night jeopardized chances of final passage of the Black-Connery minimum wage and maximum hour bill at the coming special session of Congress and drastic revision appeared certain.

A maneuver developed among House Labor Committee members to withdraw the controversial measure, a keystone of President Roosevelt's special session program, from the House Rules Committee, where bitter Southern opposition stymied it last session.

Chairman John J. O'Connor (Democrat), New York, of the House Rules Committee, warned that withdrawal of the bill from his group for revision might jeopardize passage.

Mrs. Norton for Revision.

Chairman Mary T. Norton (Democrat), New Jersey, of the House Labor Committee, indicated, however, she favored revision. She said many industries had been demanding rehearings in view of changes that were made after the original bill was introduced.

Some returning Congressmen said the current recession in business has drawn support from the bill, members fearing it would be unwise to saddle industry with additional burdens and regulations until extent of the slump is known.

O'Connor Fears Delay.

"I have seen reports that some members of the Labor Committee are planning to withdraw the bill from my committee," O'Connor said. "I hope they do not. It will delay final action and jeopardize its chances at the special session.

"Personally, I favor the bill. Any changes that are needed can be offered from the House floor as amendments."

He said he hoped to break the deadlock in his committee to insure floor consideration.

Representative Albert Thomas (Democrat), Texas, House Labor Committee member, said he thought efforts would be made to withdraw the bill from the Rules Committee for revision to curtail powers of the proposed labor standards board and provide "some sort of exemption" for small industries operating on a "close margin of profit."

'Martyrs' Lauded By Hitler as Nazi Putsch Is Recalled

Munich, Nov. 9 (AP).—Nazi Germany today observed the fourteenth anniversary of the unsuccessful beer cellar putsch of 1923.

Chancellor Adolph Hitler praised accomplishments of his regime, resulting "first in establishment of a European axis (Italy and Germany) and afterward of a world triangle" (Italy, Germany and Japan).

Hitler and other party leaders marched from historic Buergenbraeu to Field Marshal's Hall before which the first Nazi blood was spilled.

There they took part in the roll call of "martyrs" to the cause, in which 275 names of party members who died from 1924 to 1936 were called out. Seven who died in the Spanish civil war were added to the list.

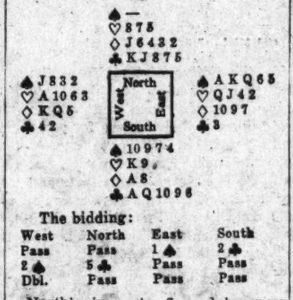
Exploring All Possibilities.

The best players are those who allow themselves the greatest number of opportunities for success. The expert often spends a good deal of time in planning the play of an apparently easy hand. He considers the various lines of play which may produce the desired number of tricks and tries to arrive at a correct order of play. As soon as it becomes apparent that one method will not succeed, he proceeds on another line. South's mistake in the hand below is that he failed to explore the winning possibility.

West, dealer.
East-West vulnerable.



The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	2 ♣
2 ♠	5 ♣	Pass	Pass
Dbl.	Pass	Pass	Pass

North's jump to five clubs may seem remarkable, but it was not at all bad. His hand was not only defenseless, but also its club length diminished his partner's defensive strength. North also realized that his partner had little defensive strength since he had failed to make a takeout double. It was probable, therefore, that the opponents could make four spades and that North would be compelled eventually to go to five clubs as a sacrifice. The advantage of bidding five clubs immediately was that the opponents probably would not be able to consider the possibility of bidding five spades—a contingency which North feared.

West opened the deuce of spades, dummy ruffing. South got to his hand with the Ace of diamonds and ruffed another spade. A low diamond was then won by West's Queen. West led a third round of spades and dummy ruffed again.

At this point South decided that his best play was to ruff a fourth spade and play East for the Ace of hearts. He therefore returned to his hand with a trump, ruffed his last spade and led a heart. Naturally, he lost two hearts, in addition to the diamond trick lost earlier.

South's mistake was in not exploring the diamond situation. After ruffing the third spade it could have cost him nothing to return to his hand with a diamond ruff instead of with a trump. In that case he would have noticed the favorable break and could have cashed the Ace and King of trumps. Dummy's long diamonds would have produced his quota of 11 tricks.

SWEET-BEER DRINKERS FAST DISAPPEARING

People who prefer sweet beer still exist. But there are mighty few of them left. During Prohibition, when home brew and needle beer were made by adding sugar and raisins to malt and hops, it was these sweet concoctions or no beer. But since repeal, wherever dry beers have been sold, they have quickly become the popular leaders.

So it's not surprising that Gunther's dry beery beer is far and away the favorite in this part of the country. Experienced beer drinkers prefer Gunther's because it is made after the manner of the finest imported Bohemian or Pilsener brews—its dry beery tang comes largely from the choicest imported hops. A "Special Dry Lager," Gunther's is the type of beer that most of your guests prefer. And now that it is packed in its distinctive new cans and bottles, you will be proud to serve it to anybody, anywhere. But why wait until your next party? Order a case of Gunther's now and find out for yourself how good a dry beery beer can be. Gunther Brewing Company, Baltimore, Md.

The Fall Of Shanghai.

Through sheer heroism the Chinese forces at Shanghai managed to stave off the inevitable for a period of three months. It was a remarkable demonstration of the new fighting spirit with which modern China is infused. If victories could be won through morale alone it would not be Chiang Kai-shek's armies that would now be in retreat.

Japan's unquestioned superiority in equipment, and its unchallenged control of the sea, had the final say in the battle of Shanghai. But the victory there has been won at a terrific price in men and treasure. According to one careful estimate, the elimination of the Chinese forces from the great port area cost the island empire no less than $600,000,000, quite aside from the millions of dollars of Japanese property investment destroyed in the struggle.

Economically and financially Japan today is a far worse case than she was before the fighting at Shanghai and in North China began. And while the strategic situation for the Japanese armies is unquestionably improved as a result of the Shanghai victory, the war is not yet over.

The Chinese retreat from the metropolis was apparently carried out in an orderly manner. For Japan to consolidate its present gains the fighting must now be carried into the interior, where Chiang long ago established his second line of defense. And the longer the war lasts the more pronounced the impoverishment of Japan will become.

For Tokyo, therefore, no moment can be better than the present to suggest peace proposals which, while saving Japan's face, will make it possible for China, too, to abandon hostilities. Certainly any reasonable peace plan will have the support of the majority of the powers assembled at Brussels.

It would, however, be a clear disservice to peace and orderly international life if any such peace terms did violence to China's territorial and administrative integrity and thus to the letter and spirit of the Nine-Power Treaty. For the powers to consent to any modification of the status quo achieved by force, would be to compound a crime, and to lay up more trouble for the future.

China herself is determined not to become a party to any such arrangement. This Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's recent statement made clear. Though the loss of Shanghai is evidently a serious blow to Chinese hopes, it need not be fatal. As long as the will to resist remains, the victories of Japan, however striking on paper, will be little more than Dead Sea fruit.

The Tuberculosis Menace.

Washington as a community has good reason to be disturbed over the report of Dr. A. Barklie Coulter that the staff of the Bureau for Tuberculosis is "utterly unable to cope with" the disease locally. Many citizens had clung to the hope that the problem would be solved with the opening of the new hospital at Glenn Dale. But facts now coming to light indicate that the fight has just begun.

The District has spent considerable sums on hospital facilities and treatment of tuberculosis. But some physicians who are thoroughly familiar with this grave health problem are doubtful that the expenditure is made to best advantage. For tuberculosis continues to spread and corrective measures are largely aimed at the advanced cases where cures are difficult and costly.

At the present time hospital facilities seem to be adequate. In fact, there are vacant beds in the new Glenn Dale sanitarium. But that is only because 200 victims recommended for hospitalization by the clinics have refused to take advantage of it. The public health nursing staff is so inadequate that it is impossible to keep a proper check upon these cases. Indeed, Dr. Coulter estimates that only about one-fourth of the active cases are being properly treated.

Many of the other victims are at large, spreading contagion throughout the city. Officials are helpless to curb dissemination of the disease, for the law here does not permit quarantine or compulsory isolation of tuberculosis patients. In short, the District is spending most of the funds available merely to hold the death rate in check, without being able to make much headway toward eliminating the sources of infection.

Washington's clinic facilities are adequate to take care of only those tuberculosis victims who voluntarily seek treatment and advice. There are no physicians or nurses to make an aggressive attack upon the disease. If the victims could be reached in the early stages, many could be cured through brief periods of hospitalization or even through proper treatment in their own homes. The city pays an average of $1,000 per year for the hospitalization of each case, chiefly because its facilities for handling the entire problem are so inadequate.

Since public health is purchasable, Washington can not ignore the necessity for a larger health budget without putting a very cheap price on the life of its citizens.

A Sick Industry.

The economic survey of the shipping industry made public today by the Maritime Commission is the kind of exploratory investigation that should have been made before the merchant marine act of 1936 was passed. While that law authorized the commission to study the long-range problems of the industry, and to make recommendations for legislation, Congress probably did not foresee an inquiry that "would take nothing for granted, not even the desirability of having a merchant marine under the American flag."

However, there is method in the seeming madness of questioning the basic objectives of the law which the Maritime Commission was created to administer. By re-examination of arguments in favor of subsidization of the merchant marine, the report places before the American people information showing the value of American shipping in the development of our foreign trade and its importance as an arm of the national defense.

These dual functions of subsidized shipping—trade and defense—are essentially contradictory, as the report states. Many of the requirements of defense, for instance, add to the cost of vessels and detract at the same time from their usefulness as commercial carriers. For that reason, the commission recommends that costs incurred entirely for defense purposes should be segregated from the merchant marine appropriations proper.

In a study covering as many different aspects of a highly-complicated problem as does the present survey it is only possible to call attention to a few outstanding facts and conclusions. The limited scope of the present and prospective subsidy program will surprise many people who have been misled into believing that subsidized vessels carry a substantial proportion of our foreign commerce. Furthermore, the Maritime Commission concludes on the basis of its financial surveys that only nine companies eligible for subsidies are reasonably certain to continue under the new subsidy program.

The outlook for the construction program urgently needed to provide for replacement of obsolete vessels is likewise gloomy. Various reasons are given for the hesitancy of investors to put their capital in a chronically sick industry. But the commission believes that, apart from the poor earnings record and uncertain outlook, the merchant marine act itself is to blame for investor hesitancy. Certain features of the provisions for recapture of earnings, financing of new construction and restrictions on methods of operations are considered burdensome, and revisions in the law are accordingly recommended.

While plans for constructing 60 new vessels over a five-year period have been tentatively laid down, they depend upon many conditions that may not be possible of fulfillment. The companies ask for a reduction in the down payment required for new vessels. Even if the law should be amended to permit the change, the commission points to uncertain business conditions and labor unrest as further jeopardizing the building program.

"So far as the subsidized lines are concerned," we are told, "the commission is forced to conclude that there is little immediate likelihood of a large construction program." From present indications, therefore, the Government will have to build the ships to replace those now approaching obsolescence, in the opinion of the Government's experts. That is plain speaking—a clear warning that the efforts to foster a privately-owned merchant marine are doomed to failure. However, it is better to face facts now while the possibility of legislative remedies is open.

The labor problem is handled with the same unflinching willingness to admit unpleasant truths. The report states bluntly that both employers and employes have shown an unenlightened attitude in dealing with one another. There have been grounds for labor unrest in wretched living conditions aboard ship and inadequate pay. On the other hand, there is no excuse for the "disgraceful" conditions prevailing on many ships flying the American flag, where order and discipline have disappeared. To correct such conditions, without which it would be futile to try to rehabilitate our merchant marine, the commission recommends the creation of a body similar to the railway mediation board.

Only passing reference has been made to the various constructive suggestions for revision of the merchant marine act. Such extensive modifications would hardly have been recommended at this early date if the legislation had received the benefit of preliminary investigations into actual conditions. In that case, too, Congress might not have relied so confidently upon production-cost formulas to provide a guide to subsidy policies. The Maritime Commission admits that it is impossible to determine comparative construction and operating costs here and abroad. All it can do is to guess roughly at the difference, use its best judgment, and revise subsidies at regular intervals "to approximate the ideal of parity" as set forth in the act.

The commission has taken the country into its confidence and exposed the defects of the present subsidy plan. It is now up to Congress to take action to correct them.

More Babassu Nuts.

During the last Presidential campaign Gov. Landon launched an eleventh hour attack on the Administration's reciprocal trade agreements program. It did not prove one of the brightest of the various bright ideas which emanated from the Republican high command. And particularly dismal from the viewpoint of the G. O. P. was the justified skepticism with which the farmers of the Nation received the charge that the trade agreements program has sold them down the river for the benefit of "Eastern manufacturers."

The trouble with this slogan was that the more it was examined the less substance was found to be in it. The rather universal opposition of Eastern manufacturers to the New Deal itself raised doubts as to the extent of the benefits which they have allegedly received at the farmers' expense. But beyond that, examination of the statistics showed—and continues to show—how utterly hollow is the assumption that the trade agreements have greatly swollen our imports of agricultural products, or have in any way materially curtailed farm purchasing power.

It is perfectly true that lately there has been an increase in agricultural imports, as has always been the case during years of real or fictitious prosperity. In every year from 1925 to 1929, for instance, agricultural imports soared over two billion dollars in value. But it takes a lively political imagination to link this tendency with the reciprocal trade program.

Worthy of examination in this connection is the case of foodstuffs. In this category imports during the first half of 1937 were valued at $112,643,000 above those for the first half of 1935, excluding sugar, the imports of which are regulated by quotas.

Almost 90 per cent of this increase, however, was in the categories of free-list items or foodstuff groups upon which duties have not been reduced by the trade agreements. Only one-tenth of the increase could possibly be reasonably attributed to the Hull program, and with rather dubious propriety even then. To greater or less extent the same conclusion arises from any objective examination of all other classes of agricultural imports.

Some G. O. P. strategists, however, incline to the belief that their party has not yet flogged this decrepit horse to death. In a statement of principles recently unanimously adopted by a conference of 5,000 Missouri Republicans the charge that the reciprocal agreements are curtailing farm purchasing power is raised again. If that misstatement was poor politics on the eve of an election it is doubly so when the Administration has ample leisure to make the accusation look ridiculous by citing facts.

It is not easy for Secretary Hull to prove that the trade agreements program has very materially increased the export of American agricultural produce, although valuable concessions in this field have certainly been obtained from Canada and other countries. But it is easy to show that the program has of itself caused no injury worthy of the name to American agriculture. Republican platform builders would do well to stop trying to prove otherwise, even if it means depriving the country of babassu nuts as a burning political issue.

Some Talk Of Alexander.

Alexander wept because there were no more worlds to conquer. James Aloysius Farley sighs because "the opposition party is reduced to helplessness and hopelessness." And perhaps the parallel won't end there.

Republicans may think it sardonic of Mr. Farley to berate them for their impotence after he has so effectively crushed the G. O. P. machine. But Sunny Jim probably did not mean to rub it in. He was thinking of the good of his country. He believes "that a strong opposition minority is absolutely necessary under our system of government." As a politician he rejoices in the overwhelming victories of the New Deal. As a citizen he wishes the opposition would do something besides "fuming at fly specks on the fabric of the administration of public affairs."

Even while the genial Postmaster General was pouring his lamentations over the ether there were signs that his yearning for a more effective opposition may not be vain. Democratic Senator Burke had told a Topeka audience a few hours earlier that "many of our Congressmen just now are preparing for the greatest fight in years, a fight to prevent once and for all this Nation putting all of its governmental power into the hands of one man." And Democratic Senator King returned to Washington with the comment that he "supposed" he would be one of the "no" men at the session of Congress beginning next week.

These are not isolated examples of the new opposition that is growing out of Republican weakness. Instead of grieving, like Alexander, the Postmaster General might find it more profitable to reflect upon the inevitable centrifugal tendency which throughout the ages has made personal government a short-lived phenomenon.

Tribute To Hoover.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When Mr. E. G. Barr in The Post of November 5 suggests that Mr. Hoover be liquidated even from speaking in the coming campaigns and then proceeds to acknowledge the greatness in the man he just adds one more voice to the cringing crowd who surrendered to Charlie Michelson's mob.

Reviewing Mr. Hoover's past: His flawless record as war relief administrator, his unequaled record as Secretary of Commerce and then his uncompromising battle to pull the Republican Party out of the clutches of Wall street—fruitless because deserted by well nigh every important man except Ogden Mills—we marvel that the most intelligent class in the Nation should, even now after five years, be afraid to express what they believe.

We would not today see the Republican Party prostrate and undone had men like Borah and Pinchot been capable of self-effacing loyalty to party and country.

I am not in a position to give Mr. Rodgers any work, but I inclose my check for $3 payable to the order of The Post for his benefit which I trust he will accept. It isn't much, but it may tide him and his family over until he can find something to do.

I think The Post's interests in matters of this kind is very laudable and it frequently opens the way for people to help others when they themselves do not have the time or opportunity to search out those deserving cases in need of help.

I prefer to remain anonymous in respect to this small contribution.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I answer a few letters in The Post of November 7?

1. Mr. Winchester has the right idea about a "hands-off" policy in the Far East, but people were asking for the same thing in 1916.

2. Miss Walters and the people like her are those who stirred up the whole Wally-Davy ruckus by looking through a monocle and saying in a Vander-Astorian tone, "My deah, she's a divorcee!" May I point out, as an amateurish student of English history, that Queen Elizabeth was the daughter of a divorcee, yet even Miss Walters will admit she did England a lot of good.

3. Why does Mr. Chase limit himself to the Republicans in his pipe dreams? While wishing for the impossible we can wish all we want to. The Kellogg-Briand pact is as dead as all other treaties and pacts. The neutrality act cannot be used, either. If our President should call it into effect trade would cease, if administered correctly, between the United States and China, Japan, Spain, Italy and Germany. This time next year England and France will be in it too. So then where's our commerce?

4. Let Europe repudiate to her heart's content. I think it behooves the United States as a nation of gentlemen to pay her public debt.

5. Mr. Hoover a leader? For four years he led us to and kept us on a treadmill. He may be a leader of "Citizen" but he is not a leader of citizens.

As I was writing this I heard a news flash which said that some insignificant person or other had assailed Mr. Justice Black's position on the High(brow) Bench. To him, whoever he is, I say only, "Oh, shut up!" DAVID J. GROSSMAN.

Neutrality Violated?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recently we read of a foray the Japs made through the American protected sector on the Soochow Creek. In allowing the Japs to use this section in their hostilities the Americans committed an act of cowardice, if not treachery, and violated the neutrality against a friendly nation. China in good faith had conceded and set aside as sacred this concession for the American people, and it is being used in her destruction.

"Alibis Make Me Sick."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Did you ever stop to think how many successful men and women had failure as their reward for years and years, before one success crowned their efforts They do not "alibi." They forget the failures and try again. People everywhere in this country are thrusting forward determined chins and going on.

They are the real ones. They are the ones who still have the same brand of courage it took to make America—the moral stamina brought to America by men and women who had not much else. After 150 years we can see it was all they needed! A generous gift of fortitude compensates for a lack of other equipment.

On the other hand, the whiners could always have done big things—if. "If somebody hadn't cheated me." "If they'd given me a chance," etc. Well, if somebody cheated you, you were dumber than the fellow who did it. You don't speak very well of your brains.

If they didn't give you a chance, and you deserved it, where is your backbone? Your alibi is about as good as alibis run. Any alibi either brands you a dummy or a spineless cry baby.

There are times when a man gets a bad break, or a raw deal, through no fault of his own. But I maintain, when that is true, it will follow "as the night the day" that that man is the kind of man who will forget it and try again. America wasn't built with alibis, and America can't live on alibis.

Alibis make me sick!

On Market Rigging.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Golfers who have tried for years to break 100, and on nearing that goal find their game deteriorating, have been known to smash up their clubs in a fit of rage and declare golf a game fit only for natural boobs, haywire New Dealers or the mentally deficient.

Mr. R. Ray's market comments seem more a reiteration of what you find in any book on "Notorius Cases of Market Rigging" than a true indictment of the market as a gambling arena to trap the wary and unwary.

Many tyros are drawn in at the top. Too many sink their entire resources and mortgage their assets at peak prices. These typical cases are regrettable. Experience must be gained from study and errors. Unencumbered capital—free from possibility of sudden need—is a prime requisite. But some like the golfer never seem to improve their game. Inefficiency is not regarded in the marketplace.

That violent drops affect business—and political tranquillity—is also undeniable. But why not indict the cause? Governmental vindictiveness, oppression and miscues led to the market drop. The few cases of market rigging are just froth on the market, affecting a small fringe of gamblers. The speculator who does not buy values and receives education, deserves no sympathy, or tears from humanitarians.

Millions seek the markets for investments; take profits only when they become unwieldy. Wild lust of something for nothing is not in their blood. Colleges and foundations are increasingly buying common stocks. They are not bothered by fluctuations; except where they represent political influences which affect income and injure business. Small "gamblers" operating within their means make satisfactory profits yearly; or if they fail to materialize, are content with investment returns. Investment savvy was never greater than today.

Why do the pontifical preachment on market evils wait until many issues in which no rigging has occurred in recent memory sell far below their true value on earnings, dividends and prospects—regardles of politics and business slump?

World-Wide Disorder.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Today's world situation is much like that of a community beset by a gang of thugs and pyromaniacs whom the missionary-minded are seeking by exhortation to convert to good citizenship. Such methods are not for lunatics or brass-knuckled bullies bent on domination by bluffing and brute force. Commercialisms's resort to conferences has already gone so far beyond a well-demonstrated point of its futility as to cause many true peace lovers to yearn for another Cromwell to clear the halls for action.

It would be heartening indeed to the sorely tried bulk of humanity to find the Nine-Power Treaty conference now under way empowered to commit its principals, or the more interested of them, to a program of supplying all necessary arms and equipment to the plenitude of Chinese man power, with assurance of defense of Russia's western border to give her a free hand in the work of rescue.

The mere thought of some such doing in progress or in the offing gives a lift to hope. China, for centuries the most peaceful of nations, as concerns interference with her neighbors, has assimilated her many invaders of the past and will doubtless in time so dispose of such of the Japanese as retain a footing on her soil. Perhaps the best promise of a lasting peace in the East would be through her absorbing the entire Japanese Empire, as she well might with adequate assistance from without and disaffection of the Japanese populace through the prolongation of hostilities.

With us there has been so much of cursing the factual results of our tardy participation in the World War as to leave no room for speculation on the highly probable worse results to ourselves, with the rest of the world, had we kept aloof. We lost our opportunity for political, moral and economic world leadership in the howls of our pennywise statesmen over the loss to our pocketbook, and hence have our own share of blame for conditions as they are and the worse that may follow.

H. G. Wells in his recent lecture is reported as trying to console us with a sort of historical long view of the balances that come about in human affairs, ending with the remark that "after the gangsters come the vigilantes." It is surely high time the latter were onto their job

The Post Impressionist

Old Lady

SHE stood in the doorway of the rambling, white frame house in Williamsburg, smiling. The afternoon sun, slanting down through the low-hanging magnolias, stirred soft lights in the gray of her hair, and, standing there, she looked like some great lady from out of the past.

It was fitting that she should be old. Youth would have been out of place in that ageless dwelling that had sprawled there beneath the gnarled trees through the centuries.

Beside me, my wife was enchanted.

"It's perfect," she whispered.

We got out of the car and went up the stone walk to the door where the old lady was waiting.

Her greeting was gracious. She held out her hands and led us into the house.

"I saved a room for you," she said. "Come, I'll show you."

She led the way, unhurriedly, up a broad staircase and opened the door of a room, then stood aside, smiling proudly.

The room, too, was from out of the past. It was a great, spacious, high-ceilinged room that hadn't changed as the world outside changed. There was a massive, canopied bed, towering to the heights of the room. There was an ancient desk, open, its writing top covered with cloth, its quill pen dipped and ready for use. There was a mammoth, well-worn old rocker and three carved, smaller chairs, and at the end of the room a great fireplace gave the whole room a feeling of warmth.

Somehow, we felt that it all was unreal. We felt that the room, and the house, and the old lady herself were unreal and that if we touched them they would crumble to dust.

But we looked at the old lady who was mistress of this, and we saw the color mount in her cheeks and we saw her smile a strange, wistful smile as she looked at the room and we knew that she was alive, and that what kept her alive were her dreams.

"We haven't changed a thing in this room," she said. "It is just as it was when the British were here, and afterward, during the war, it was LaFayette's room."

She paused and looked up at a colorful portrait of LaFayette hung in a gold frame. Then she went on.

"A lot of great gentlemen stayed in this house during those days, but this room was kept ready for LaFayette and he often stayed here.

"Then the city was burned and we thought . . . I mean Mother thought . . . I hadn't come along yet . . ." she smiled and colored slightly at her mistake, "Mother thought that our house would be burned. She cried all that night, but in the morning the house was still there. It was one of the few places here that escaped.

"There were parties here, in this house, and people came here from all over Virginia.

"I used to stay up all night and slip out of my room and hide on the staircase and watch the dancing downstairs.

"Then I grew up and I was allowed to go to the parties . . ."

And the little old lady standing there became young and the wrinkles faded out of her face and her voice became strong and the thin shawl disappeared from her shoulders and we saw in its place a soft evening dress and she was fresh and vibrant and young.

She talked on, and under her spell we were carried away and the old Williamsburg lived again there in the afternoon sun. And the little old lady was no longer dependent on paying overnight guests for her life, but was a great lady herself, the lovely, young mistress of a great house.

We walked along the quiet streets of the town and for us the restored antiquity of the colonial village took on a new meaning.

We joined a party of tourists who, too, had come to see Williamsburg, but we seemed apart from them because we were still under the old lady's spell.

The old courthouse and the gaol and the Governor's Palace were not empty tombs of the dead, but real places, peopled with living men.

We could see them and hear them as we moved slowly along and the old taverns still rocked with the laughter of men who were dead.

We went up to our room and it no longer was warm. The bare floor was cold and there was no fire in the fireplace and the room was silent and cold.

The spell was gone and the wind whistled outside and rattled the windows and a lot of the wind came into the room.

We undressed and climbed the small ladder by the side of the bed and got into the great bed and pulled the blankets close about us to keep warm and we tried to think again of the past but it was no use.

We were young and accustomed to soft, modern beds, not the hard beds of the past.

Then we thought of the old lady downstairs and we knew that to her the house was not cold. We had seen her when we came in, dozing in a chair in her room.

She still wore the thin dress she had worn when we met her and about her shoulders was the same threadbare shawl. But she could not have been cold as she dozed in her chair and her thoughts must have been pleasant thoughts.

Because, as we passed the door of her room, she was smiling.

The Duke And Mr. Green.

IN ALL THE idiotic farce of the Windsor duke's ill-starred plan to come among us and snap at a caviar canape in tow of a triumphant woman, there is nothing more absurd than the swollen pretense of our own Will Green that he speaks for labor in the United States and that his feelings matter a hoot in hell one way or another.

The duke, of course, doesn't know the great, All-American mushmouth as we do and undoubtedly was impressed by his title of president of the A. F. of L., which does have an all-embracing sound to the uninformed.

In fact, our Will himself, being no brighter than the law allows, probably is sincere in his delusion that his own moist and mealy announcements on whatever matter are the refined official opinion of all who toil in the U. S. A.

• • • •

AMONG OTHER truths which the cashiered King doesn't know are the fact that Mr. Green's organization, by its exclusive policy toward people who want to learn trades and join the union, restricts opportunity and tries to monopolize work; that it imposes initiation fees which amount to extortion if paid and to a boycott if not; that in some cities unions affiliated with Mr. Green's federation have been dominated by criminals of the underworld with no delicate aversion to batting the ears off any member having the temerity to ask for accounting of the graft, and finally, that Mr. Green's unions, finding the racket unrestrained by any enforceable laws, often set themselves up as a private income tax authority, collecting tribute from thousands of rank-and-filers whom the government, in its always fallible wisdom, has exempted in the humane belief that they couldn't afford it.

The Duke, if he had ever taken any real interest in anything beyond the rim of his glass when he was over there turning on the charm and tossing his golden curls, might have learned that there was more labor by at least ten to one outside the outfit which now has the dumb effrontery to call itself American labor. And even since then, if his lust for knowledge had exceeded the contents of the divorce register and La Vie Parisienne, he might have gathered that there was some sort of rivalry between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O., both claiming to represent labor and both together taking in too much territory.

TO BE SURE, it is the right of anybody to pretend to speak for all right-thinking people, all true Americans or all labor in this country, and our Will was merely making politics, as they say in Europe, when he sounded off.

But his outfit represents no more than half the organized labor, and the total of the organized labor is less than half of the grand total of those who are engaged in the scuffle which, incidentally, would be less difficult if Mr. Green's unions were less aristocratic, greedy and arrogant toward the new groups of people just coming of age, but the duke couldn't be expected to know about that.

Just how it comes to be Mr. Green's business or that of his federation if a guy wants to come over here and stand inspection before his ever-loving home folks and perhaps poke his nose into a workman's dwelling so as to give his trip the appearance of a mission does not appear in William's decree. But our Will is like that.

It didn't occur to the duke that coming to this country is a simple matter of buying a visa and a ticket and slinging his satchel aboard a steamboat and that thousands of people do it every week. He had to do it the hard way and pull a face because we weren't unrolling the red rug, although he waived those attentions when love conquered all.

And it didn't occur to Will that he was guilty of the same pomposity, and in the name of labor, too, in presuming to disapprove or indorse the trip. Our Will has plenty to answer for himself in his own outfit's outrages against American labor before he qualifies to censor the Atlantic passenger lists. The nerve of that guy!

Splitting Jersey

Election Results Show That Garden State Is Really Two Separate Entities With Few Common Interests.

By Eugene Pharo,
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Moorestown, N. J.

THERE were really two elections for Governor in New Jersey on November 2, and there were two successful candidates. But the form of the State constitution, and the inertia of tradition, kept one victory from being legally acknowledged.

The whole matter brings up once more the proposal made on this page of The Washington Post some time ago, that the Commonwealth be divided, as it was in the seventeenth century, into two provinces, each to be independent, or to be merged respectively with New York and Pennsylvania, as the electorate shall decide.

For unless this is done the present system of government in the Garden State is certain to keep two sections at odds with each other and to make the whole more than slightly ridiculous, as has been done during the administration of Gov. Harold G. Hoffman (Republican) and as the auspices now indicate will be done during the third term of Gov. A. Harry Moore (Democrat).

While this matter is to an extent a problem local to New Jersey it has elements that are of national significance, although neither the Democratic New Deal, nor any figure of national proportions, was involved. For the obvious solution to New Jersey's problem will strike most observers as so drastic an innovation that, once initiated and carried through, it would embolden other States and even the Federal Government to engage in experimentation that would make this indeed a new Nation.

Before explaining further, let us look at the statistical results produced by the election. They show that Senator A. Harry Moore was elected Governor over the Rev. Dr. Lester H. Clee by a plurality of, roughly, 45,000. They also show that the Assembly which, this year, was Democratic, with 39 assemblymen following the donkey and 21 following the elephant, has been put into reverse. When the Legislature assembles in 1938 there will be 41 Republican members and 19 Democratic.

And the Assembly will be backed up, in whatever contests it enters with a Democratic Governor, by a Senate that is also predominantly Republican; the almost evenly divided forces of this year being changed to 13 Republicans and 8 Democrats.

Hague Machine Still Dominant In Hudson.

THROUGHOUT the jubilation of local political chieftains, observers find ululating the intense grief and shocked surprise of State Senator Clee, who was certain that he would be elected; so much so that he threatens a challenge of the vote in Hudson County, where all of the plurality that enabled Moore to win was accumulated.

Still better to understand the basic significance of the results the reader should bear in mind that Hudson County is the stronghold of the veteran Democratic boss, Frank J. Hague, Mayor of Jersey City, during whose suzerainty only three Republicans have managed to squeeze into the Governor's chair, among eight Democrats, of whom two were Moore. And that Hudson, while it is the smallest county in the State though with next to the largest population, succeeded as a tail might succeed in wagging a dog, in swinging the current election, as it has swung others.

It should be known further that all of the counties in New Jersey below Trenton went for Senator Clee, and six of those above Trenton as well; while only seven, and all of them in the northern part of the State, gave pluralities to Moore—ranging from the totals of 14 in Somerset, 511 in Sussex, 1,373 in Hunterdon, 1,548 in Mercer, 21,659 in Middlesex, to 129,720 in Hudson. So that if the State were divided along the lines of the two provinces of East Jersey and West Jersey, as originally owned by Sir George Cartaret and Lord John Berkeley, respectively, by grant from the Duke of York, the two elections would have shown the following results:

West Jersey (that is, all of the State approximately south of Trenton): The Rev. Dr. Lester H. Clee, of Essex, elected by a plurality of 73,105.

East Jersey (that is, the State above Trenton, and especially the heavily populated counties contiguous to New York): Senator A. Harry Moore, of Hudson, elected by a plurality of 118,803.

Therefore, if Mr. Moore, either in his own right, or as viceroy of Mr. Hague, were to establish a capital at the original site in Elizabeth, and rule his province from there; and Dr. Clee should move, let us say, to Camden, and establish his capital there, the respective interests and desires of the two sections of the State could be managed with some degree of unified control and common trust.

Southern Part Of State A Forgotten Area Today.

BUT AS IT is, the eight counties below Trenton, and at least six of those above, will have to do the best they can for the next three years with a sovereign from the principality of Hudson. They must content themselves—to the exact extent they fail in receiving an even exchange of political favors from the Democratic organization—with obstructing in the Legislature whatever designs, either for the good of the State or for the aggrandizement of their own party and its satellites, may be evolved by Mr. Moore and his mentor, Mr. Hague. That they can do even this much is due to the persistence of good old American home rule, whereby the assemblymen and senators are elected in the counties they represent in a fashion that puts them outside any direct influence from Hudson County.

As for the demonstration of political strategy that was given in so apparent a fashion on November 2, any student of politics who cares to take a map of New Jersey, and the election figures for the various counties, will view a composition more instructive than a score of books. For while Mr. Clee visited every county in the State in the course of his campaign, and was acknowledged by all independent voters of both parties to be sincere, able and independent, Messrs. Hague and Moore stuck pins into the very limited territory where machine tactics and intensive cultivation of the electorate could bring about the results they wanted, no matter what was desired by the outlying provinces. And they devoted nearly all of their efforts to that territory; making forays and arrangements in other parts of the State only in degree sufficient to insure that the voting would not be too lop-sidedly in favor of their opponent. In the end they checkmated their opponent.

The only recourse open to voters in other parts of the State, where the majority wanted Clee and voted for him, is either to put through the Legislature and the polls an amendment to the State constitution splitting the State along historical and logical lines; or to continue to be in the future, as southern New Jersey has been for decades, forgotten or merely obstructive parts of the total governmental entity. Although they may, if Gov. Moore makes the natural gesture and appoints Mayor Hague to go to Washington as interim Senator from New Jersey, have the dubious satisfaction of knowing that their State as a whole is represented in the National Legislature by one of he best political chess-players of our times.

The Open Door

By William J. Van Schreeven

American-Japanese Relations.

IN THE LIGHT of recent events Foster Rhea Dulles has written an interesting and provocative book. Here in brief compass is a survey of the relations between Japan and the United States from the Open Door to the naval issues of 1935. The author makes but brief excursions into such topics as Japanese exclusion and other factors of comparative little moment and devotes the major share of his study to an account of the relations between Japan and the United States in regard to China.

Since the advent of Japan to the orbit of world powers, unhappy China has had little to say concerning its own destiny. From the moment that Russia was defeated by Japan the fate of China has been sealed. Of course, President Theodore Roosevelt arranged for the peace treaty that ended hostilities, but insofar as China was concerned it meant only that Japan had supplanted Russia in South Manchuria.

• • • •

MORE AND MORE Japan came to feel that she had a special position in the Orient. Coincident with this policy the United States saw the Open Door being slowly closed. The Japanese were too shrewd to slam the door in the world's face, but she insisted on the role of doorkeeper. According to the author the United States has long been deluded about the possible volume of the China trade. Even the assiduous cultivation of dollar diplomacy could not overcome the facts in the case—Japan was a better customer than China.

However, the antagonism between Japan and the United States in the Orient continued. During the World War Japan ignored the fact that China was her ally and seized German-controlled Shantung from the helpless Chinese. At Versailles this grab was confirmed to Japan by the equally helpless idealists and the hopeless realists.

Although Gen. Tasker H. Bliss characterized Japan's demands in China as abandoning the democracy of that nation "to the domination of the Prussianized militarism of Japan," and although Woodrow Wilson raged against the obtuseness of Lloyd George, who confessed he had never heard of the 21 demands, Japan won her point. Senator Lodge and others used this as a telling attack upon the League of Nations.

• • • •

BLANDLY JAPAN continued her way in the East. Her policy, in the name of an "Oriental Monroe Doctrine" became one of seizure, consolidation and protection. First a piece of territory was seized, this then was consolidated as a part of the Japanese Empire, from thence onward protection always meant a permanent garrison of troops and generally an encroachment upon the boundaries in order "to protect" the Japanese Empire!

At the Washington conference Japan suddenly developed sweet reasonableness and not only agreed to suspend her naval program, but also signed the now famous Nine-Power Treaty. For a brief time—so long as the liberals were in control—Japan fulfilled her treaty obligations. However, the immigration act of 1924 touched the tender pride of the Japanese. This action weakened the liberals in Japan and strengthened the militarists.

• • • •

MEANWHILE CHINA has awakened. Japan looked with no friendly eye at the strengthened Chinese Republic. She did not strike, however, until the rest of the world was engaged in grappling with the depression. Then with suddenness Japan moved into Manchuria. The United States railed against such action and refused to recognize the puppet state set up by the Japanese. Ignoring the protest of the United States as well as the half-hearted indictment of the League of Nations, Japan pursued her destiny. That such destiny means a career of seizure, consolidation and protection with the resultant process of extermination is a fact that Japan is willing to accept.

The author in writing his book has indicated that the Open Door policy has failed largely because the United States has thus far refused to follow her diplomatic demands with force. Although his book was written before the present crisis, he has anticipated such an event.

Appeal to the Duke.

Aw, come on over!
Don't be like that . . .
It's annoying, of course,

Squawks about you playing
Up to Hitler too much . . .
But be yourself!

• • • •

Forget all that stuff about
Making your "contribution"
To a solution of world problems . . .
Forget those housing studies! . . .
Just come over for FUN!

• • • •

Then nobody can misunderstand
You. Even Baltimore labor
Knows what a good time is,
And probably approves of it.

Why do you and the Duchess
Want to go around poking
Into world problems?
You're a young married
Couple, and who ever heard of Mixing up honeymoon with Coal mines and economics,
And whether workingmen's
Bungalows should have Hot and cold showers?

• • • •

You worry too much, Duke . . .
You seem to think you've Got to be very serious and Go around looking very
Burdened by world cares . . .

And all that!
It all fits into the picture . . .

Let the whole world

They are through trying to solve Anything except questions such as

Tom McCarthy

Meets Walter Wanger of Hollywood.

THIS COLUMN is likely to get completely out of hand today. It's skirting on the edge of the "colossal" right now.

I ran into Mr. Walter Wanger, down at the National the other night, and we got to talking, and later, went over to the Round Robin for sustenance. And the first thing I knew, I had a vision that the column was likely to be pretty hard to hold down. It was likely to go colossal.

TOM McCARTHY.

Not that Mr. Walter Wanger is one of these "colossal" fellows. But he is the Mr. Wanger of Hollywood, U. S. A. And when I get talking in terms of an audience of 20,000,000 people . . . well that old "colossal" feeling sets in . . . and I get a trifle on the "heady" side.

Since Mr. Wanger is only a producer (that is the man who conceives and makes a picture) and not someone really famous like a bit player, who gets fan mail, it might be a good idea to identify him. He's the man who produced "Gabriel Over the White House," "Vogues of 1938," "Private Worlds" and a few other big ones.

You probably remember the last one named because that was the picture which took a dive right into psychology. And one of the principals began to hear voices. And the voice came out of the screen saying "Sall-ee-ee, Sally, Sally, Sall-ee-ee." It was, if you recall, very weird. And all the kids in our neighborhood were going around for weeks imitating that spectral voice and yelling "Sall-ee-ee."

But, as I say, Mr. Wanger isn't one of those "colossal" fellows, even if he does talk in terms of an audience of 20,000,000. And even if it did take a war to get him interested in pictures.

• • • •

FRANKLY, I've always wanted to meet a Hollywood producer. I've met a few of the movie stars. But the person that always captured my imagination was the Hollywood producer. He was the person who told the "stars," "You'll come to work at 9 in the morning—and you'll like it." That sort of a person always captured my imagination.

But, after talking with Mr. Wanger for a while, I discovered that there was no mystical secret involved. It was merely plain business.

"The movies are like anything else," Mr. Wanger told me. "They're an industry." When Mr. Wanger said that, he set down his glass and twisted his scarf. It might be well to point out that while Mr. Wanger is a youngish looking and definitely alert gentleman with a touch of gray in his hair, he is also a "scarf twister."

When he left the National Theater, he carried only a scarf. And when he made his observations, he twisted his scarf.

It was a fine white silk scarf, but he showed it no mercy. He draped it across his left hand and he twisted the ends. He pulled it through his fingers and gave it a mighty tug. He held it at arms length and took a double bow-line hitch about his thumb and index finger. Mr. Wanger is indubitably a scarf twister. So you may visualize his remarks for the remainder of the column as accompanied by a "twist" of the scarf.

"It took a war to get me interested in the movies," Mr. Wanger said . . . and the scarf lengthened by three inches.

"I saw what they did in Italy during the War with propaganda newsreels. And then I knew that the movies really amounted to something. Of course, even when I was at Dartmouth, I'd had an interest in the theater."

Mr. Wanger is one Hollywood producer who pronounces all the vowels in "theater."

"But, during the War," he continued, "I saw what the newsreels did in Italy. You see Italy couldn't realize that America was coming into the War on the side of the Allies. They showed the populace pictures of Fifth Avenue crowded with civilians. And then showed them pictures of the same street, taken six weeks later. In the final picture, Fifth Avenue was crowded with men in uniform. That convinced the Italians that America was coming into the War. And it showed me that the motion picture was a tremendous agent of propaganda.

"Not, mind you," Mr. Wanger said, and the scarf lost two threads along the side, "not that I saw the motion picture as merely an instrument of propaganda. But I saw its power. I saw the superlative power of conviction it carried. Then, I became interested in the movies."

Now, as a matter of fact, when Mr. Wanger talks, it doesn't sound exactly as it looks in print. He talks very quietly, and, except for the wear and tear on the scarf, there's very little of what is known in the trade as "high pressure."

But I wanted to know what a Hollywood producer thinks about such things as . . . oh, well, . . . money.

"We don't want to go bankrupt," Mr. Wanger said. "But it's just like any other job. We like to do a job sometimes for . . . for the fun of it."

I think Mr. Wanger was talking about "Private Worlds" then, which was rather a daring experiment, far removed from ordinary movie fare.

"And we could do it oftener, and it might raise the tone of the movies, but we don't get the right kind of co-operation. They try to sell all movies on the same basis. Boy meets girl. She loves a doctor and . . . so what. They haven't realized that there's more than one motion picture audience. They think too much in terms of 20,000,000, educated and uneducated. Publishers aim certain books toward certain reading groups. Motion picture publicists should try to do the same to the movies."

The scarf was still holding up, so Mr. Wanger continued. He mentioned how the audience didn't appreciate the technical difficulties of many shots, such as the color technique in "Vogues of 1938." He expressed his belief in the future of Technicolor. And he expressed his distaste with movie censorship.

"I heard a man the other day who claimed that the movies must be kept free of propaganda. All movies are propaganda. They're propaganda for a certain style of dress. For a certain style of speech. Or, even, for longer or shorter kisses."

Mr. Wanger didn't say so, but I inferred that he felt that the motion pictures should enjoy a freedom as great as that of the press.

A gentleman who knows his business and considers himself in much the same light as the manufacturer of a motor car, or radio, Walter Wanger, most daring of the picture producers, exhibited one touch of Hollywood.

His cufflinks were rectangular and gold. And one link housed a miniature watch.

"Hollywood!" I exclaimed.

"Paris," Mr. Wanger said sternly.

Labor Conferees Recess for 8 Days

By the United Press.

Peace conferences between the American Federation of Labor and the Committee for Industrial Organization were adjourned for eight days late yesterday after the warring factions deadlocked on the issue of which industries each should dominate.

The stalemate came when it appeared the rival groups would agree upon a division of industries in which each would have organizational jurisdiction. One delegate went so far as to say that 16 industries had been agreed upon, but George M. Harrison, chairman of the A. F. of L. peace committee, said sharply:

"No industries were agreed upon. There was no agreement at all, although we made some progress."

Kennedy Urges Wide Reforms To Save 'Sick' Merchant Marine

Report to Congress Asks Mediation Board for Labor Disputes and Training School for Seamen Operated by Coast Guard.

welfare—that is, as a carrier of the commerce of the greatest exporting Nation on earth and as an auxiliary to the Navy—the commission recalled the utter dependence of the United States on foreign ships during the World War and then viewed the ominous situation in the world at present.

"Today," it said, "we are faced with the threat of a recurrence of the conditions of the last war. Political uncertainty and international tension are on the increase. If the present antagonisms should result in war, we would be confronted again with the problems which beset our commerce in 1914.

Importance Stressed.

"The disruption to our trade probably would be much greater in the future as a larger percentage of our trade now is being transacted with nations not having their own shipping facilities. For this reason it is important that we maintain a merchant marine of some proportions in the international carrying trades."

In approaching the question of national defense, the commission recalled the "ludicrous climax" to what was to have been a mighty gesture in 1908 when President Theodore Roosevelt sent the fleet around the world. Since there was no American merchant marine, to speak of, the great battleships had to be serviced by supply ships flying foreign flags.

The commission told Congress that the Navy would require a "minimum" of 1,000 merchant ships of all types in the event of war with a major power.

It quickly added that these would "represent but a fraction of the number that would ultimately be necessary in case of prolonged hostilities."

Survey Complete.

The commission's report was based on the most complete survey ever made of the American marine, a survey in which Chairman Kennedy called in authorities on ships and shipping from universities and shipping lines to aid the experts on his own staff.

The commission told Congress that the Government would have to pay out between $25,000,000 and $30,000,000 a year in subsidies to shipping companies to make up for the higher cost of constructing ships in this country and the higher cost of sailing them—more if the lines are unable to pay their share of building ships and the Government has to build them.

On this point, the report said:

Living Off Its Fat.

"The brutal truth is that the American merchant marine has been living off its fat for the past 15 years; that is, we have been subsisting upon the war-built fleet. That fleet is now nearing the end of its useful life.

"Many of our operators built their business on vessels which they secured from the Government at prices as low as $5 a deadweight ton. Who is going to replace these vessels at $200 a ton. The commission is forced to conclude that, from all present indications, it will have to be the Government."

That statement, a definite conclusion, is found in the 126-page report itself. However, in supplementary statements by Chairman Kennedy, the problem is handled on an "if" basis. If the private lines can't build the new ships, then the Government will have to build them.

Offers Three Suggestions.

The commission left up to Congress the question of what type of operation is to be adopted, offering three suggestions:

1. Continuation of the present system of Government aid to private shipping companies.

2. Government ownership and private operation. (The S. S. Algic, for example, is owned by the Government but operated by a private company.)

3. Government ownership and operation.

"The commission feels," the report said, "that private ownership should be given every opportunity to succeed. That is the historical attitude of the American people. Furthermore, the merchant marine act of 1936 prescribes private operation 'insofar as practicable.' It must be recognized, however, that public ownership may come about naturally as a result of the inability of some private lines to finance needed replacements."

Significantly, the commission reminded Congress that there was "a pronounced trend toward Government participation in shipping."

"Russia and Brazil," it said, "have 100 per cent Government ownership and operation. The Italian government owns all of the stock of the liner services, but permits private operation under rigid government control. The French government owns one service outright and is heavily interested in the major company (government officials serve as directors). The German government is reported to own 75 per cent of the stock of the great Hamburg-American-North German Lloyd combination, a fleet larger than that of all our subsidized lines put together.

Subsidies Essential.

"Great Britain has forced consolidation of its two greatest lines and, in addition to building superliners, has even contributed working capital. Japanese shipping is dominated by three feudal families which work under strict government supervision. The government of Poland owns 75 per cent of the stock of the Gdynia-American Line."

7 Have Disappeared.

How serious the situation is for many private lines is gathered from a survey of the 31 companies which operated through the erstwhile ocean mail contracts and the seven lines owned by the Government. Said the commission:

"Of the mail contract lines, only nine are reasonably certain of continuing under the subsidy program; four more may join later if foreign flag affiliations and other restrictions are waved; two additional lines may be added after reorganization.

"As to the remaining lines, seven have already disappeared; two more, now engaged in intercoastal trade, have expressed a desire to discontinue operations in their present form; the remaining seven present special problems which make uncertain their continuation as presently constituted.

"Of the Government lines, at least two or three seem to have sufficient economic worth to warrant their continuation as at present constituted."

The commission said there was no doubt that America must provide a Government subsidy if the American flag is to be kept on the sea. Private capital hesitates to invest in such a sick industry. The higher standard of living in this country, with the consequent higher costs of constructing and sailing a ship, places the American ship operator at a disadvantage against foreigners.

"It is safe to assume," the commission said, "that the majority of our subsidized services would disappear if Government support were withdrawn."

Fourth in Tonnage.

The commission listed tables in its report to show that the United States, in comparison with the maritime powers, ranks fourth in tonnage, fifth in ships having speeds of 19 knots or over, and sixth in vessels 10 years of age and under. Sixth means last.

Here is the table:

Vessels 10 Years of Age or Less.

Country.	Tons
Great Britain	4,689,000
Germany	1,020,000
Japan	774,000
France	523,000
Italy	418,000
United States	416,000

Half Get Subsidies.

The commission went out of its way to clear up "a great deal of loose thinking" about the American merchant marine. To begin with, it pointed out that the number of seagoing vessels (1,000 gross tons and over) totaled 1,517. Of these, 426 are engaged in foreign trade. If tankers are subtracted, such ships total 374.

Contrary to popular inference, the commission said, not all these receive Government subsidies, but only about a half of them. The other half get no Government aid, as, for example, the ships of the United Fruit Co.

That company and three others, the commission said, probably would join in the subsidy program if certain foreign-flag affiliations and other operating features which Congress has deemed objectionable could be waived or the merchant marine act amended.

May Transfer Flags.

Unless something is done, the commission warned, these companies may ultimately "be lost to American registry by transfer to foreign flag operation."

Suggested Changes.

In that connection the commision suggested to Congress the following amendments to the Merchant Marine act of 1936:

"That the contractor be given protection against the cancellation of subsidies without just cause.

"That the down payment required on new construction be changed from 25 per cent of the domestic cost to 25 per cent of the foreign cost. (This would mean a sharp reduction in the down payment and possibly permit some lines to build ships, whereas otherwise they might not be able to.)

"That the sales price to the purchaser include interest during construction upon that portion of the commission's payments which represent the foreign cost of the vessel.

"That, where the construction differential is more than 50 per cent, operators be permitted to build abroad.

Urge Control Increase.

"Thatthe provisions for the recapture of profits be based on a 10-year instead of a 5-year period.

"That provisions be made for permitting the contractor to increase his reserves.

"That the commission's power to relax the restrictions relative to subsidiaries and foreign-flag affiliations be enlarged.

"That the commission be given the power to waive the $25,000 salary limitation when such waiver would be in the public interest.

"That the language of the act be clarified in a number of instances to facilitate the administration thereof."

Consolidation Urged.

Reminding Congress that although the Maritime Commission is charged with responsibility for the development of an adequate merchant marine, 50 bureaus exercise some control over shipping, the commission said it "would seem desirable that many of the functions of these agencies should be combined."

The greatest duplication, it said, occurs between the Maritime Commission and the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation of the Department of Commerce.

Dismal as was the picture painted of the Merchant Marine in the commission's report, it ended on this hopeful note:

History Unfortunate.

"The history of the United States in subsidized shipping has been most unfortunate. We have generally acted under a lash of necessity which precluded the planning necessary to a sound commercial policy. Our present attempt to compete in the international carrying trades was born of the World War.

"Previous to the War we were a negligible factor in the overseas trade. Then, goaded by necessity, we requisitioned, bought, seized and built vessels at a rate never equalled in the history of the world. We blanketed the oceans with ships services in a frenzied effort to make up for our negligence of the preceding half century. Today, we have gone back a long way from the ambitious program of the early 1920's.

$200,000,000 Available.

"We are about to start again, not in a riot of enthusiasm, not with an expenditure of billions, but with a carefully planned program that gives due regard to the factors of need, method and cost. Therein, we believe, lies our hope for the future of the American merchant marine."

The commission now has funds aggregating $85,000,000. In addition Congress has authorized the expenditure of $115,000,000. This gives a total of $200,000,000 now available for the purpose of rehabilitating American shipping in foreign trade.

Maritime Commission Reports on Shipping Conditions

Labor Section of Maritime Commission Report to Congress

Following is the labor section of the report of the United States Maritime Commission to Congress:

One of the most difficult problems with which the commission is confronted today is that of seagoing personnel.

Labor conditions in the American Merchant Marine are deplorable. Unless something is done to reduce inter-union friction, to increase the efficiency of our crews and to restore order and discipline upon our ships, all Government efforts to develop a strong American fleet will be futile. A merchant marine built upon inadequate and unsatisfactory personnel is little better than no merchant marine at all.

Labor relations in the shipping industry have long been characterized by an unenlightened attitude on the part of both employer and employe. The employer, for his part, has in the past imposed long hours, low wges and cramped quarters. The employe, meanwhile, has abused his employment in a manner that would not be tolerated in any other industry. The result of these things has been that shipping, despite the marvelous technical progress of the past century, has remained in a backward state so far as labor relations are concerned.

The commission found, in approaching the labor problem, little information upon which to procced. There are available practically no statistics relating to the employment of seamen on oceangoing vessels. The earnings of seamen, their conditions of labor, the average length of service and similar matters affecting seafaring men seem to have been overlooked. The commission was forced to undertake some rather unusual research in order to establish a proper basis for its study of the labor problem.

10,000 Are Employed.

It was found, first off, that no one knew exactly how many men were employed on our subsidized vessels. The study revealed that there is a total of approximately 10,000 men employed on the 155 vessels now under subsidy contracts.

The next step in the determination of conditions among seamen was to inquire into wages and earnings. Although the Federal Government now publishes a table which compares American wages with those paid on foreign ships these figures do not provide a proper comparison. For one thing, they are distorted by currency fluctuations; for another, they do not take into account subsistence, security, pensions, or the purchasing power of the seamen's wages in his home country. It was accordingly necessary to work up a mass of original data in order to arrive at a true conception of the conditions of American seamen, both as compared with foreign seamen and with domestic workers ashore.

To make up for statistical deficiencies and to get the very latest information about American seamen, the commission arranged with a private agency in New York to interview 1,000 men. Interviews were secured in various parts of the city to secure as large a spread as possible. The replies reveal some interesting facts about the men who man our vessels.

The men interviewed have been at sea anywhere from one month to 40 years. They come preponderantly from seaboard States. The majority are sailing in capacities below what they consider themselves qualified by experience and licensing to fill. Most of the men are single; practically none have bank accounts; few vote.

An interesting part of this study has to do with continuity of employment. Almost without exception the replies indicate an excessive turnover. Although practically all of the men regard their occupation as permanent, few stay long on one vessel. Thus many seamen report eight and ten years of service, of which perhaps not more than four months have been spent on one ship or even in one line. The replies also reveal that even during prosperous times the men spend an average of several weeks a year "on the beach," or unemployed.

The only way to ascertain working conditions, it was decided, was to give the men an opportunity to lay their grievances befor the commission. Accordingly, hearings were held at various ports on the three coasts, at which representatives of both labor and employer appeared to discuss conditions aboard American vessels. The regional hearings were followed by a general hearing held in Washington.

In addition to holding hearings, members of the Commission went aboard more than 40 vessels in order to see for themselves the conditions under which our seamen were working. They found that in many cases the complaints of the men were justified. Quarters were found to be crowded, unsanitary and poorly ventilated. The result was a series of orders for the remodeling of crew quarters that should go a long way toward removing dissatisfaction with the living conditions aboard ship.

It must be recognized, of course, that it is exceedingly difficult and expensive to attempt to remodel old vessels to meet the needs of today. New vessels being designed by the Commission contain advanced accommodations, including a recreation room for the use of men on their watch below. Adequate mess rooms also will be provided for all members of the crew, men will be berthed three and four to a room on cargo vessels and not more than ten to a room on passenger ships. Improved heating and ventilating systems will be installed, decks and crew quarters will be covered with moisture-proof material and bulkheads insulated. As a safety measure, the quarters will be placed aft of the collision bulkhead. These improvements will be incorporated in all new vessels and are being effected, so far as practicable, on existing vessels.

Wage Scales Revised.

The Commission has also announced minimum-wage scales and is preparing additional rules with regard to manning scales and working conditions. The Commission further has provided for vacations for both licensed and unlicensed personnel. In making its recommendations, the Commission has disclaimed any attempt to abridge the rights of employers and employes to establish higher wages, increased manning scales and better working conditions by collective bargaining or otherwise. Spokesmen for the ship operators have agreed that minimum standards will not be regarded by them as maximum standards and that the employes' right of bargaining collectively will not be impaired by the Commission's action.

Despite the efforts made by the Commission to give American seamen superior working conditions and decent wages, there is little likelihood of an early solution of the serious labor situation with which we are confronted.

Conditions in the American Merchant Marine are disgraceful. Order and discipline have in many cases disappeared. Passengers complain of insolent treatment. Vessels have been delayed by the use of the "sit-down" and "quickie." Such conditions must be remedied and remedied forthwith. With conditions remaining as they are today, it is only a question of time before disgusted shippers and worried travelers turn to the vessels of our competitors.

Shippers and travelers realize that disorderly vessels are likely to be unsafe vessels. Safety at sea is based upon order and discipline as much as, if not more than, the quality of equipment. "Personnel is to material," said the great Nelson, "as three is to one." The man with a rifle makes the army; good forecastle hands make the ship. The sea is no place for divided authority.

It should be admitted in any discussion of the labor problem that the shipowners themselves are in no small measure responsible for the present unfortunate situation. During the war thousands of fine young Americans were brought from every section of the country to man the vessels acquired by the Shipping Board. They learned quickly demonstrating that American seamen, given decent working conditions and proper encouragement, are the equal of any. Then came the era of liquidation when the Government began to withdraw from shipping. Lines were, one by one, discontinued or turned over to private enterprises. Wages fell and working conditions grew steadily worse until, at the depth of the depression, some American seamen were receiving as little as $25.00 a month, living under wretched conditions, eating unpalatable food, and working 12 hours or more a day.

The result of such conditions was bound to be disastrous. Many of our young men left the sea never to return. Questionable elements filtered into the ranks of our seafarers. The men grew bitter and desperate. An explosion was bound to occur.

The shipping industry is now paying for its short-sightedness in repressing labor for so many years. Some of the operators who paid low wages during the depression were at the same time receiving substantial subsidies from the Government for the preservation of an American standard of living. By denying their employes the right to organize, shipowners created a condition favorable to un-American doctrine. For 11 years owners refused even to answer requests of their workers for collective agreements. When the seamen finally did organize and forced the owners to hear their demands, these demands were naturally distorted by the repressions of the preceding years.

Seamen and operators alike must not lose sight of the fact that shipping is primarily an international business. Losses incurred by domestic enterprise as a result of labor difficulties may be made up later. The situation with respect to shipping is vastly different. The business which American lines are unable to handle is likely to go to our foreign competitors. Some of it may be recovered, but much of it will never come back.

The present situation is complicated by conflicts now raging among different unions. The commission has remained strictly neutral in these conflicts; it has not and will not assist any section of maritime labor at the expense of the others. The commission's interest is to see that all our seamen get a square deal and that factionalism between labor unions does not disrupt the country's attempt to rehabilitate our merchant marine.

If our attempt to rebuild American shipping is to succeed, the labor situation must be greatly improved. Order and discipline aboard American vessels must be restored; men must learn to abide by their articles, and to obey their officers. On passenger vessels there must be a new concept of service.

The shocking conditions now prevalent aboard our vessels have led to a variety of proposals for the adjudication of labor disputes in the shipping industry. Among these proposals is the suggestion that there be set up in the industry an agency similar to the National Maritime Board in England. That board has been singularly successful in settling disputes of British shipping for over 20 years.

Mediation Board Urged.

It is obvious that, were such a plan adopted, it would mark a long step forward in having the "conference table replace the picket line." Any such method would, of course, have the wholehearted support of the commission. However, the burden of establishing such a board rests upon the ship owners and the unions. The lack of united labor organizations, and the lack of understanding that now exists between the owners and the men, makes the early creation of such a board unlikely.

For this reason, the commission has concluded that the establishment of a mediation board similar to that provided in the railway labor act desirable at this time. The Railway Mediation Board has been conspicuously successful in minimizing labor strife in that field. Under the act, when a labor controversy arises, either or both of the parties may invoke the service of the mediation board; or the board may proffer its services. In the event that mediation fails to produce an agreement, the act provides a method of arbitration, which is, however, not compulsory. If the board is successful in neither mediation nor arbitration, both parties are free to act. However, if the action of either party threatens to deprive the Nation of an essential service, the board notifies the President of the United States, who may appoint a special fact-finding board. That board is required to investigate the dispute promptly and report to the President within 30 days. During this period, and for 30 days thereafter, the parties are forbidden to alter the employer-employe relationship by strike, lockout or other action except by mutual agreement.

The experience of the railroad industry reveals that the technique employed—conferences and delay—are effective not only in eliminating the hasty acts which beget strikes but also in bringing about mutually satisfactory settlements.

In view of the pressing need for stable labor relations in the shipping industry, the Maritime Commission recommends the establishment by Congress of a mediation tribunal analogous to that now in use by the railroads with such modifications as the different condition of the shipping industry may require. The purpose of this legislation should be:

1. To avoid any interruption to water-borne commerce.

2. To provide for the prompt and orderly settlement of all disputes concerning rates of pay, rules or working conditions, and

3. To provide for the prompt and orderly settlement of all disputes growing out of grievances or out of the interpretation or application of agreements covering rates of pay, rules of working conditions.

Because of the importance to the national economy of uninterrupted water-borne commerce and because of the intimate relationship of stevedoring to merchant shipping it is recommended that the jurisdiction of the proposed mediation board apply not only to disputes between operators and vessel personnel but also to disputes betwen operators and longshoremen.

It has been contended that such a board, to be successful, (1) should have the active support of, in fact be requested by, both employers and employes, and (2) should not be created until it can be based upon the existence of coleictive bargaining agreements. While recognizing the force of these objections, the commission feels that the present situation calls for immediate affirmative action. It is hoped that before the mediation board is established the collective bargaining which now exists to some extent may have become practically universal in the maritime industry and that both the employers and employes in the industry, as was the case in the railroad industry, will give their unqualified support to the creation of such a board.

NLRB Has Jurisdiction.

The Federal Government has vested the National Labor Relations Board with jurisdiction over questions of representation, collective bargaining and the elimination of unfair labor practices. This makes unnecessary a grant of similar jurisdiction to the proposed tribunal.

The commission wishes it to be clearly understood that it has no intention of interfering in any way with the orderly processes of collective bargaining; nor does the commission have any desire to hinder the development of stable unionism in the industry. The commission believes that the establishment of a mediation board would foster collective bargaining on a permanent basis and thereby serve the interests of employe, employer and the general public.

Several bills providing for a mediation tribunal have already been introduced into Congress. They are similar in import and, generally speaking, in accordance with the views of the commission.

Archaic Methods.

It has long been the practice of the seas to sign workers on and off for each voyage. Whatever justification there may have been for this archiac system in the days of the sailing ship, when voyages were of much longer duration than at present, there seems to be no reason for its continuance. The task of maintaining orderly industrial relations in the maritime field will be considerably lightened even if a nucleus of the crew can be hired on a continuous basis.

In furtherance of this plan there should be a revision of the existing form of ship's articles. While these articles give the employer some measure of protection against desertions, and while they insure the men against dismissal in the course of the voyage, they amount to little, in the final analysis, beyond a periodic hiring and firing of the personnel. It is not surprising that the worker, under these conditions, should develop an indifferent attitude toward his job.

Continuous employment is the rule in most industries. It should be the rule for shipping.

Sea Report Is Held Final Proof U. S. Needs Shipping Strength

G. U. Expert Says Principle of Buying Space in Foreign Vessels Is Fully Refuted by Kennedy; Welcomes 'Rational Program.'

By Dr. Edmund A. Walsh,

Vice president, Georgetown University; regent, School of Foreign Service; author: "Ships and National Safety—the Role of a Merchant Marine in Balanced Economy" comments on the maritime report:

The long awaited report of the Maritime Commission on the American merchant marine, published today, may well prove to be a landmark in the history of the shipping industry. It is more than a technical survey. It is an official answer, under Government auspices, to certain fallacious arguments advanced in recent years, even in Government circles, by a now discredited school of thought, which minimized the importance of a strong, dependable merchant marine in a balanced national economy. But it is likewise fair warning to the industry as a whole that ship operators must put their house in order if they would escape the ultimate absorption of shipping into the ever widening circle of complete governmental regimentation.

It is not hostile to the industry, though recommending the elimination of numerous superfluous companies. It avoids sweeping denunciations, but impartially admits the abuses and failures of the last 20 years filled with controversy and charges of inefficient management. It charts a constructive course for the future without wasting time on tiresome repetition of the utterly misleading interpretations put on subsidies during the hearings on mail contracts. It is a refreshing contrast to the gross misrepresentations and amateurish misinformation sponsored by the Black committee, which covered the same ground in recent years.

Proposes Rational Program.

It proposes a conservative and rational replacement program for the future, and urges amendments to the recent merchant marine act which are designed both to encourage the shipping industry and assure the public of diversified, adequate, speedy and modernized shipping facilities. It censures certain practices of ship operators in the matter of decent living quarters, wages and working conditions, but warns agitators that sit-down strikes, contempt of discipline, insolence, sabotage, and other disorders on the high seas will not be tolerated any more than outright mutiny.

But it is in the broader field of public policy that the survey makes its most notable contribution. It recognizes and affirms the important truth that an adequate Merchant Marine under American control and independent of foreign carriers is essential to the economic stability of this country. The bitter and costly lessons of the contrary policy under which we were 90 per cent dependent on foreign-flag ships are acknowledged and a firm determination expressed that a similar peril should never again be permitted to endanger our prosperity. The important factor of foreign trade, the survey indicates, would become nugatory and inoperative if the carrying of it were surrendered to the discretion of foreign fleets, now so largely controlled by their respective governments, whose national needs and policies would determine the condition under which America might be permitted to utilize avaliable cargo space. With the growing drift toward centralization of all economic agencies in the hands of government abroad, this would provide a powerful political weapon to be wielded against helpless American exporters.

The expense involved is estimated by the survey as not more than $30,000,000 per year. In our present national budget that is veritable small change. Such an insurance policy is moderation itself when compared to the hundreds of millions generously allocated to recreational facilities, Federal theater projects, dancing lessons, bizarre murals, and birth control of livestock. Foreign governments think nothing of devoting twice that sum for the construction of two superliners of the Queen Mary type, an extravagance which is wisely rejected by the survey in favor of the Manhattan and Washington experiment. The thirty million requested by the commission for its immediate building project is small indeed compared with the $1,000,000,000 spent annually by the American people for cigarettes. The Federal tax on cigarettes would in one year provide sufficient funds to execute Mr. Kennedy's moderate program for the next 13 years!

The survey places the Merchant Marine in its true perspective as a branch of the National defense supplying essential auxiliaries for the Navy, our first line of combat. In fact, the survey contends that a substantial portion of the thirty million should be charged to our Naval account, since many of the construction features now mandatory are imposed precisely because of the function which new ships must assume as Naval auxiliaries.

In particular details the survey will doubtless create controversy and possibly some resentment. It is not, for example, necessary to lay any further emphasis on the fact that over three billion has been expended since 1917 to create a Merchant Marine. The greater share of that investment, as the survey concedes, was purely a war measure devoted to the creation of a floating bridge for the transport of men and munitions to a battlefield. The battle was ended before the bridge was completed, but the expense was contracted as a war measure, leaving the finished product on our hands for uses for which the ships were not intended. That sum should not enter into the cost account of a normal Merchant Marine.

Rejects Trade Argument.

The survey rejects the claim advanced by overzealous and nervous economists that a strong Merchant Marine would conflict with the present policy of negotiating reciprocal trade agreements. The commission adopts the viewpoint that concessions made by the State Department to encourage international commerce should never include a weakening of an essential service upon which so much depends in the matter of national security and a balanced domestic economy.

Mr. Kennedy and the Maritime Commission are to be congratulated on the honesty and courage with which they have faced this complex problem. They have reproduced the facts as they found them, and made definite recommendations both to the industry and to the Congress; the report is particularly courageous with respect to the liberalization of these sections of the Merchant Marine act governing the salaries of executives, the recapture of profits and reserves for the lean years. It will probably be attacked on these points by the strict constructionists and by the left wing of labor for the section on seagoing personnel. And there will probably be a veiled flank attack from overseas, from those competitors who would prefer that we have no Merchant Marine whatsoever. The battle then, is by no means won. The application and execution of the survey is yet to come.

U. S. Reasserts Right to Act in Border Killings

2,700 Haitians Reported Slain by Dominican Troops Oct. 5.

By Sidney Olson.

The United States Government yesterday reasserted its right to step into an inter-American dispute as a counselor whenever peace on this continent is threatened, as diplomatic repercussions here continued from cabled reports of the "massacre" of thousands of Haitian citizens, including women and children, by Dominican soldiers.

Acting Secretary of State Sumner Welles said yesterday the role of this country in such disputes is that of a guide toward establishment and preservation of peace.

His statement followed unconfirmed reports to an authoritative quarter here that the slaughter of Haitian workers exceeds in both horror and numbers even the wildest of the earlier reports.

Word was received in Washington yesterday that "at least" 2,700 Haitian workers, laboring deep in Dominican territory, were slain in the incident of last October 5.

March of Death to Sea.

One large group of Haitians, told that they were being marched to boats which would take them home, were escorted by the Dominican soldiery to a pier, it was said. At the pier—where no boats were docked—the workers reportedly were forced to march off into the shark-infested waters of the harbor.

Another group, reported numbering 1,200, was lined up and then slaughtered by machine-gun fire, it was said.

The Dominican Republic, under the iron dictatorship of President Rafael Leonidas Trujillo, maintained strict censorship on the incident, which first began leaking through to this country after Haitians, who escaped through the forests to their homeland, told the details last week, it was said.

The foreign minister of Haiti, Georges Leger, arrived in Washington yesterday. He declared flatly that between 3,000 and 5,000 Haitians had been killed on Dominican territory since October 5.

Full Reparations Sought.

He told reporters: "We insist on full reparations for the victims and on punishment of those responsible."

Later Leger visited Welles and was a guest of President Roosevelt at a 5 o'clock tea. Both visits were described as purely social. Welles and the President individually expressed, at press conferences, the hope that the situation would be settled amicably and said they were following the situation closely.

The Dominican Minister here, Andres Pastoriza, charged Monday night that the stories of "collective slayings" in Dominican territory were "wholly absurd," and declared that the "border incident" of last month had been vastly exaggerated.

Leger, on the other hand, contended yesterday that the casualties occurred "well within Dominican territory." While Pastoriza indicated that the "clashes" were between Haitian workers and Dominican land owners, Leger asserted the attacks were made by Dominican police and civilians. The unconfirmed reports received here yesterday indicated Dominican soldiers had made the attacks.

Pastoriza also contended there were but few casualties, and that these had resulted from Dominican resentment at a heavy influx of Haitians seeking work.

The United States was drawn into the situation primarily through the Dominican-American convention of 1924, in which, after the United States had occupied the country for eight years, the United States reaffirmed its right and obligation of 1905 to collect all the customs duties of the republic "until the payment or retirement of any and all bonds issued by the Dominican government."

Hard pressed for funds, the Trujillo regime in 1931 passed an emergency law which diverted $1,500,000 annually from customs revenues and in 1934 obtained an arrangement permanently ameliorating the debt terms, reducing the annual amortization payments to less than one-thirtieth of the former total.

U. S. Willing to Negotiate.

Welles, commenting on a statement by Pastoriza that the Dominican people hope for revision of the 1924 convention—in line, Pastoriza said, with the Buenos Aires convention of last year—said this country would be glad to negotiate.

The Acting Secretary, author of "Naboth's Vineyard," a two-volume history of the Dominican Republic, said this country will negotiate as soon as the Dominican Republic offers some proposal this country can accept "within the limits of our responsibilities."

He added rights legitimately acquired on the basis of contractual obligations, to which the United States is a party, must be considered in this connection.

Observer Describes Horrors In Mass Slaughter of Haitians

Men, Women and Children Led to Death by Dominicans, He Says; Few Who Escaped Relate Tales of Jungle Brutality.

they were assassinated, and that not one escaped."

The next communication, dated October 26, reads in part: "Matters are now very serious, in spite of the fact that circulars have been distributed announcing that an inquiry is to be made into the massacre. The testimony of all parties confirms what has been reported."

Killed in Bands of Six.

"The rural police rounded up the Haitians in the different districts and brought them to Dajabon in bands of about 150. When they arrived there they were told that they could not cross by the bridge and were led six at a time through the belt of forest south of the customs.

"Here men armed with clubs, machetes, daggers with three-prongs, and bayonets awaited them. The men were clubbed first and then hacked to death with machetes. Women were told to raise their right arm, and were killed with three-pointed daggers, and the children were tossed on bayonets.

"I learn that the commandant at Dajabon refused to have anything to do with the massacre and that the next day he died, the Haitians say of over-excitement.

"There is abundant evidence that many of the soldiers were shot rather than carry out the cruel orders. Those who did the executions were kept in a drunken condition, which accounts for the fact that quite a number escaped by pretending to be wounded and lying among the dead, until night when they were able to creep across the frontier."

5,000 Dead "Conservative."

"It is quite impossible to know the number of the dead, but they must amount to thousands. One of the officers told me that a conservative estimate was 5,000.

"The bodies were piled in holes on the savannah to the south of Dajabon. Layers of wood interspersed with layers of bodies and kerosene was poured over whole. The flames from these bonfires were visible above the belt of forest between Ouanaminthe and the plain.

"During the six nights these fires were seen, it was reported but it has not been able to confirm it, that '. . . an eyewitness at Capotille on the new frontier' saw 400 bodies buried in a single trench.

"The frontier is now open and throughout the day there is a continuous stream of people crossing. We saw numbers who came from Blanco, a town in the Puerto Plata district. They were part of some 800 who were reported to be on the way, and said they had been six days en route. They had had to take the tracks through the forest, etc., as it was reported that robbers were on the highway.

"Robbed of Everything."

"They had been robbed of everything, including their shoes, and I saw some with swollen feet. You cannot realize their joy on crossing the river into Haiti. The frontier is open for two weeks, and I have been wondering what will happen to the thousands of Haitians on the sugar plantations, for it would seem impossible for them to arrive within the time limit.

"The whole town is in mourning and the question on all hands is whether this is but a try-on and that if the American Government does nothing, the next step will not be the invasion of the northern part of Haiti, which is publicly stated across the frontier to be the plan of the President. . . . Police refuse to arrest those who talk about the matter and an order has been issued for them to do so. . . . I wish someone could come down and make an inquiry.

"Scenes in churches are deeply moving. Men and women come to weep. Almost every family has connections across the frontier and the sorrow of those who know that their dear ones have been killed is little more than the anguish of those who are almost certain that their relatives have been murdered.

Sixty in One Family Slain.

"I know of one family who have the names of 60 relatives who have been massacred. Little wonder that the whole town is in mourning."

On October 26 the correspondent wrote again:

"The situation on the Dominican frontier is still very serious and it is amazing to us in Haiti that nothing has yet got into the foreign press . . . The massacres have ceased as far as I can gather but the situation is even more serious.

"Last Friday there was fighting at Capotille, and several were brought in wounded, including a lieutenant . . . A large merchant has ordered a fleet of camions to get the Haitians from the area as far as Santiago. In all, I think 12 camions have gone, and today they have begun to return. I saw two of them packed with people."

Marine School Idea Advanced By Adm. Wiley

Suggests 500 Men Be Trained for Merchant Ships Yearly.

Author of the Maritime Commission's plan to train 500 young Americans each year for the merchant marine is Rear Admiral Henry Ariosto Wiley, U. S. N., retired, who, as a member of the commission, has taken a deep interest in the personnel problem.

There are four State nautical schools which train officers, but the country has no facilities for the training of unlicensed sailors, despite the fact that the merchant marine act says that there shall be "a trained and efficient citizen personnel."

Under Admiral Wiley's plan, worked out with Rear Admiral Russell R. Waesche, commandant of the United States Coast Guard, 500 American citizens between 18 and 23 would be recruited each year from all parts of the country, and be trained under supervision of the Coast Guard.

Base Site Suggested.

It has been proposed that the Maritime Commission set up a shore base on Hoffman and Swinburne Islands, in New York Harbor. These islands are under the control of the Treasury Department. They were formerly used by the Quarantine Service, but have not been in use for several years. Hoffman Island has 15 buildings, which could be used for living and training purposes.

The training, according to the Maritime Commission's report, would cover approximately three months at the shore training station on Hoffman Island; six months on a training merchant vessel, and three months on a cruising cutter of the Coast Guard.

$1,356,418 Yearly Cost.

Estimates submitted by the Coast Guard indicate that the cost of training 500 recruits would be $1,443 per man, or a total of $721,418 for the year. This would cover all costs except the expense of rehabilitating Hoffman Island, estimated at $100,000; the reconditioning of a Coast Guard patrol boat, estimated at $40,000; original outfits, estimated at $40,000, and reconditioning of one of the ships owned by the Maritime Commission, to accommodate recruits and crews, estimated to cost $465,000.

The total outlay for the first year would, therefore, amount to $1,356,418.

The commission told Congress that James A. Farrell, owner of the full-rigged sailing ship, Tusitala, had offered the vessel for a training ship, and recommended that the offer be accepted.

Kennedy, Ace Trouble Shooter, Calls Marine Job His Toughest

Has Brilliant Record of Achievements Behind Him.

The fat, 126-page report on the American Merchant Marine had been handed to newspaper reporters, and Joseph Patrick Kennedy, hard-hitting chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, was asked how the job stacked up against some others he had tackled.

"This," he said, "is the toughest job I ever handled in my life, without any reservation whatsoever."

In the case of Kennedy, that is a significant cargo of words. Recognized as President Roosevelt's most gifted trouble-shooter, the tall, 48-year-old Irish-American from Boston has behind him a long list of tough jobs, all of them brilliantly executed.

As a boy he peddled candy on the S. S. Excelsior, a Boston excursion steamer. While attending Harvard, where he was a baseball star, he operated a sightseeing bus during vacations, earning $5,000 in three summers. He became a bank examiner after he was graduated and by the time he was 25 was a bank president, youngest in the country.

Worth $50,000,000.

Thereafter he became general manager of a shipbuilding plant at Quincy, Mass., where he met a young Assistant Secretary of the Navy named Franklin D. Roosevelt. Next he joined an investment banking firm and laid the foundation for a fortune that now totals $50,000,000. (He paid $600,000 in taxes last year.)

In 1925 he heard that an English firm had invested $7,000,000 in an American film company and was seeking to get out. Kennedy hopped a boat and bought out the English firm for $1,000,000. That took him to Hollywood. He was admittedly a flop when he tried to tell the directors how to direct, but the industry quickly recognized him as a financial genius. His fortune grew.

A pioneer supporter of Roosevelt for President, he modestly faded into the background after the 1932 campaign. But Roosevelt had a job for him, the toughest perhaps on the New Deal agenda. He made Kennedy chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Tough Job for $12,000.

Some New Dealers frowned at the selection of a "Wall street man." They wanted Ferdinand Pecora, who already had exposed Wall street.

When, a year and two months later, Kennedy had finished the job of cleaning up speculative abuses and had turned over the chairmanship to another, he went back to private life amid the acclaim of New Dealers and Wall streeters alike.

The Radio Corporation of America asked him to reorganize the company. He did. The stockholders later asked the amount of his fee and he calmly asked for $100,000.

When President Roosevelt, calling him back from private life, asked him to take over the chairmanship of the new Maritime Commission, he could only offer him $12,000 a year. And that, as he says, has proved the "toughest job I ever handled in my life"—a job wherein he is both diagnostician and doctor to an industry that has been sick since the Civil War.

In his early 20's Kennedy married Rose Fitzgerald, daughter of a former mayor of Boston. They have nine children and live in a mansion that overlooks the Potomac.

Roosevelt Sets Trade Ahead of New Spending

Ways Sought to Stimulate Industry to Take Up Business Slack.

cussion of Federal fiscal policies before the American Academy of Political Science, in New York, tonight, has announced he will give his views on expenditures for "pump-priming."

Those who have been in contact with the President this week have the impression that he still is committed definitely to balancing the budget—which would preclude any substantial additional outlays of Federal money. Mr. Roosevelt at his press conference yesterday reiterated his hope and expectation of a balance in the Federal budget in the year which begins July 1, next. Of course, a sizable emergency outlay in the next few months would go into the deficit for this fiscal year and would not necessarily void what is regarded as a Presidential promise for 1939.

Relief Funds Adequate.

Nor does there appear to be any immediate need for increasing relief funds at this time. Unless relief rolls shoot unexpectedly upward this winter and stay there, the WPA can manage out of the $1,500,000,000 given to it by Congress for this fiscal year, it is believed by officials.

Federal relief rolls reached their low in September with approximately 1,450,000 beneficiaries. Since then they have crept upward toward 1,500,000. Virtually all of the increase so far has resulted from seasonal unemployment, it is explained. Until about ten days ago, it was asserted, employment has been fairly well maintained—at least on part time. But in recent days—the figures are not yet available—sizable lay-offs have been reported in some industries, particularly copper, steel, automobile parts, automobile tires and textiles.

The WPA with its present fund is said to be able to handle as many as 1,700,000 or 1,800,000 individuals in January and February—provided, however, that this number is reduced rapidly in the spring months. Even should the relief problem become sharply acute again, it would not necessarily mean, it was pointed out, that the Federal relief coffers would be reopened as widely as two or three years ago. The problem might be met by reducing individual payments or by requiring States to shoulder a good part of the excess burden.

Industrial Spur First.

All that, however, is regarded as a future problem by the President—one which may not be reached, it was explained. For the present he is concentrating on spurring private industry to take confidence and move into the breach. His experts have pointed out to him that housing, electrical utility construction and railroad equipment are three fertile fields in which advances could be made under the right auspices.

Mr. Roosevelt indicated yesterday he is thinking intensely about the electrical utilities, whose executives recently said they could stand from $1,000,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 of construction to bring their plants up to date. During the day Mr. Roosevelt conferred with Clyde L. Seavy, acting chairman of the Federal Power Commission, John M. Carmody, Rural Electrification administrator, and Ervin E. King, master of the Washington State Grange.

Subsequently, at his press conference Mr. Roosevelt rather suddenly and without any prompting said that in going over transcripts of White House press conferences in 1934 he had come across some observations he made at that time in regard to the power issue. He thought they were interesting because they represented views which he still held.

High Evaluations Hit.

Briefly, the President contended that the major trouble with the electrical utilities was inflated valuation of their property on which rates were charged. He said a return to "common law" principles was required so that a utility's valuation for rate-making purposes should not be greater than the actual amount prudently invested in the property.

If the utilities would follow such a course in exchange for the monopoly which they enjoy, they would have nothing to fear and would be assisted by the Government. Private utilities, of course, could not be protected from competition from municipally-owned plants, he said. But if the rates of the private utilities were fair, municipalites would not enter the power business, he added.

Apparently, Mr. Roosevelt wished to give the impression that he had no quarrel with the electrical utilities if they based their rates on fair and not inflated valuations. But he did not point up his discussion in that fashion. Indeed, he left his press conference generally in doubt as to the point he was seeking to make.

Supreme Court Involved.

Some believed he wished to give a word of encouragement to the utilities. Others thought he was undertaking to bolster the stand of the power commission in its brief before the Supreme Court in the California Pacific Gas & Electric Co. rate case, urging "prudent investment" as the criterion of present value.

Still others thought the President had seized on the power discussion to avoid further questioning about the business situation. He previously had parried a question as to his attitude on pump-priming expenditures by asserting they are not in the picture now.

This discussion, however, had one significant aspect. Mr. Roosevelt was reminded by a correspondent that the Supreme Court in the past had not agreed with what he was advocating, and he was asked how he could get around that obstacle.

Stores Battle Dupont Circle Underpass Plan

Connecticut Av. Merchants Name Committee for Study of Traffic.

The Connecticut Avenue Merchants Association last night voted to present a formal protest to the Commissioners against a proposal to construct an underpass at Dupont Circle.

A committee was instructed to study traffic conditions near the circle and offer one or more methods of relieving congestion there.

Opposing the underpass because it would take a large percentage of prospective shoppers underground and impair the investments of business men, members further claimed the change was not needed.

Underpass Suggested.

An alternative suggested the construction of an underpass on Massachusetts avenue instead with an entrance one block east of the circle and an outlet one block west.

Other proposals included the erection of islands around Dupont Circle similar to those in use on Sixteenth street and the elimination of the circle fountain with division into four parts—lanes for both Massachusetts and Connecticut avenues.

The committee appointed to present the statement of opposition and suggested alternatives included E. C. Graham, H. L. Rust and Mrs. Eleanor Patterson. Two others will be named later.

Guest speaker of the association was Miss Ethel Ehlen, Post fashion editor, who discussed style fashions and marketing methods. Offering assistance to members in solving their problems in merchandising and styles, Miss Ehlen devoted a portion of her talk to answering questions of members concerning individual problems.

Plans for the forthcoming Christmas gift show were discussed. Expressing approval of a gift show this year in place of the annual fashion show, members set November 30 as the tentative date.

Plans approved provide for a twelve-hour gift show to be presented in the main ballroom and Chinese Room of the Mayflower Hotel, with booths of Connecticut avenue merchants showing a complete selection of suitable Christmas gifts.

HARLAN MILLER Over the Coffee

Tomorrow the Duke of Windsor would have arrived to inspect American housing . . . It would have taken him years to inspect all the houses whose owners are willing and anxious. Now we must wait till after Christmas darn it.

• • • •

If he accepted all his invitations, he would conclude that Americans are all well-housed . . . Unless his 70 trunks complicated the housing problem.

• • • •

I hope he doesn't mean it when he hints that he may forget about the housing problem when he comes, and devote himself to having fun . . . Too many American householders are counting on him for expert advice.

• • • •

Dozens of Washingtonians have picked up the children's toys in the living room, under the mistaken impression that he will inspect THEIR houses.

• • • •

One Washingtonian has put two inner-spring mattresses and two box springs on each of the beds in his guest rooms, just in case.

"—an expert's perplexities"

Perhaps the most pathetic case of overcrowded housing conditions involves the Washington hostess who complains that she can seat only 32 in her dining room.

• • • •

When the duke sees the slum conditions in THAT din-

> My spies declare there's a plot to present the White House with a player piano and thus undermine Tommy Corocran's influence with the First Family . . . Might throw in a Thesaurus, too.

ing room he is almost certain to exclaim:

"Something must be done!"

• • • •

In my bashful way I've been wanting a housing expert to study my house, and it might as well be the Duke of Windsor as anyone else.

• • • •

I'd like to have him take a look at the recreation room in our basement which has a big radiator that can't be shut off. It gets the heat from the furnace first, so it's the warmest room in the house.

• • • •

Consequently, the bathrooms and bedrooms are not as warm as they should be . . . Should I establish a winter dormitory in the basement room, and transfer the family bathing to a portable tin tub there?

Something must be done!

• • • •

Americans will watch the duke not only as a housing expert, but also as a newly-wed husband. Has marriage changed him since his carefree days on Long Island?

> We've barred from the Land of the Free the French gal who plugged a descendant of Lafayette with a miniature bullet. Lafayette, we're still here!

Will he still be willing to go riding with the gentry before breakfast in his tailcoat and white tie, so his late return from last night's party won't delay things?

"—for the duke: 2 mattresses, 2 springs"

What will the duchess say if he wants to go swimming with his clothes on, in pursuit of his housing probe? I'm a little apprehensive that while the duke investigates American housing, Americans will want to investigate the duke.

• • • •

To judge by the duke's wan and wistful fascist inclinations (a faint smudge on his royal nose of which he is almost unaware), he will be troubled by the plight of decent, honest people who have been forced to close their town houses, dismiss most of their servants and move into duplex apartments.

• • • •

Then there's the housing problem of the Elmer Zilches, who live out near the railroad tracks in almost any American town . . . They can't find a piece of tin to patch the hole in the kitchen where the snow drifts in on the cookstove.

• • • •

And how about the plight of a family in a four-room dwelling in Tugwelltown, out in Washington's suburbs, the town of the future, when five relatives descend on them from the West, a typical bourgeois dilemma?

• • • •

His royal highness' experience with the houses of the world during his 20 wanderjahren will come in handy . . . He might become a sort of world czar in the housing industry, with special jurisdiction over the housing problems of Zulus, Samoans, Russians, Southern sharecroppers and sorority and fraternity houses.

Something must be done.

D. C. Officials To Fight U. S. Cut in Funds

Budget Bureau Pruning Estimates, Department Heads Believe.

'Fine Comb' Hearings Scheduled to End This Week.

With indications that the Budget Bureau is applying the Administration economy edict to 1939 estimates of the District Commissioners, department heads yesterday were preparing to carry their fight for larger appropriations to Congress.

The findings of the Budget Bureau are always zealously guarded until they are sent to Capitol Hill by the President, but District officials have reason to believe the local budget when submitted will be substantially below the $50,000,000 asked by the Commissioners.

Congressional hearings on the District budget will open early this year, probably around December 1, as Chairman Collins, of the House sub-committee on District appropriations, wants to have the local bill ready for House action soon after Congress convenes.

Estimates Combed.

The District budget hearings are now in the third week, but are scheduled to be concluded Friday or Saturday. All municipal estimates are being examined with a fine-tooth comb, it is understood, even to trivial expenditures for public comfort stations.

Several department heads whose estimates were cut by the Commissioners came away from the Budget Bureau hearings with the impression that they may be reduced even more before they reach Congress.

Collins has intimated also that he leans toward District economy, but he declined to comment on the $50,000,000 estimates until he has had a chance to examine them and to confer with city officials.

May Be Last Hearing.

Should the current moves for reorganization of the District government bear fruit in legislation at the next regular session, the present hearing before the Budget Bureau may be the last for the District.

All parties engaged in studies of reorganization are agreed that the District estimates should be submitted directly to Congress rather than via the Budget Bureau.

The Commissioners are expected to make such a recommendation after the special citizens' committee headed by E. Barrett Prettyman, former corporation counsel, makes its report.

"Static" Budget Asked.

A plea that the District's budget remain static and unincreased for another year was made yesterday by Rufus Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers Association, in a letter to business and civic organizations.

Lusk urged individuals and groups interested in the budget situation to communicate at once with Acting Director of the Budget Daniel W. Bell, requesting an opportunity to express themselves.

Among groups to which copies of the letter were sent were the District of Columbia Building & Loan League, the Washington Building Congress, the Federation of Business Men's Associations, the Operative Builders Association, the District Council on Municipal Administration, the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, the Federation of Citizens Associations, the Washington Board of Trade and the Washington Real Estate Board.

Profits Tax Assailed

The Retailers National Council, a federation of ten national retail trade associations, meeting at the Washington Hotel yesterday adopted resolutions urging, if not repeal of the undistributed profits tax, changes to protect the small business firm and to encourage expansion. One of the suggestions was that corporatoins be permitted to retain a portion of net undistributed profits with 30 per cent suggested free of any undistributed profits tax.

Associations and their representatives who approved this action were: American National Retail Jewelers Association, Charles T. Evans and Wilson A. Streeter; National Retail Furniture Association, William J. Cheyney and H. A. Moran; National Council of Shoe Retailers, William Girdner; Mail Order Association of America, John F. Thomas, O. M. Kile and C. A. Bethge; National Retail Hardware Association, Herbert P. Sheets and C. G. Gilbert; National Shoe Retailers Association, Lee Langston and Herbert J. Rich; National Retail Dry Goods Association, Harold R. Young, Lou Hahn; National Association of Food Chains, John A. Logan; National Association of Men's Clothiers and Furnishers, Allen Sinsheimer.

U.S. May Buy Huge Cancer Radium Bomb

Advisory Council Studies $400,000 Purchase in First Session.

Treatment of a single cancer patient with as much as $400,000 worth of radium, something which is virtually impossible today, soon may become a reality as a result of Federal intervention against the Nation's second greatest killer.

Holding its first meeting yesterday, the National Advisory Cancer Council discussed the practicability of purchasing 15 to 20 grams of the precious element and using it in one place. Radium costs approximately $20,000 a gram.

At the present time the largest radium "bomb" weighs 8 grams. Before its size could be doubled, means would have to be devised to prevent or minimize the skin burns which occur when an unusually large amount of radium is used in a single treatment.

Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General of the Public Health Service and ex-officio chairman of the council, announced the appointment of a subcommittee to study and report on not only the "giant bomb" proposal, but all physical agents now in use, or in process of development, for the diagnosis and treatment of cancer.

Cancer Fellowships Noted.

The group consists of Dr. Ludvig Hektoen, the council's executive director; Dr. Arthur H. Compton, University of Chicago physicist; Dr. James Ewing, cancer research director at New York City Memorial Hospital, and Dr. Francis Carter Wood, director of the Crocker Institute of Cancer Research, Columbia University.

In its all-day meeting at the National Institute of Health, interrupted only for an inspection tour over the Bethesda, Md., site where the National Cancer Institute will be erected, the council took up the following other business:

1. Voted to encourage cancer research by private and public pathologists, medical practioneers, radiologists, chemists and others by sponsoring fellowships, developing new training facilities and otherwise promoting interest in the field.

2. Decided that grants in aid shall be made, as a matter of policy, to specific projects, as opposed to loosely defined programs whose continuation is in doubt.

Field Study Approved.

field study whose purpose will be

3. Approved the launching of a to determine, State by State, the scope and nature of facilities for diagnosis and treatment.

Dr. Parran disclosed that nearly 50 applications for funds by private and public agencies and individuals for cancer research are pending.

The council also agreed to give further impetus to investigations of chemical compounds capable of producing cancer in experimental animals.

The sub-committee appointed by Dr. Parran will examine the possibilities of the cyclotron, a new form of atom smasher. This instrument produces radiations which, some authorities believe, are comparable to X-rays and radium.

Warrant Validity In Raid Attacked

An attack on validity of a warrant used in a raid on an alleged gaming establishment at 1230 Fourteenth street northwest, was made by attorneys representing seven men yesterday before Justice Jesse C. Adkins in District Court.

Those on trial are Carroll Peyton (Nubby) Nuckols, Moe Morganstein, Robert A. Murray, Anthony Lawrence, F. Pisani, Harry C. Adams, and George W. Godfrey.

Attorney Harry T. Whelan requested Justice Adkins to quash the warrant on the ground it was issued under the espionage act, which, he claimed applied only to general Federal cases.

Two witnesses, Nuckols and Murray, told what they knew of the place. Murray said he ran it, and Nuckols admitted he placed a "black-jack" machine there.

Should Justice Adkins rule the warrant was unlawfully obtained, many of the 65 raids staged by police last fall would be thrown out.

1,000 Attend School Fete At Anacostia

Second Building Asked to Relieve Crowding as First Is Dedicated.

Anacostia Junior-Senior High School was dedicated formally last night in ceremonies at the school auditorium led by District education officials. More than 1,000 persons were present. Capt. Hoel S. Bishop, jr., assistant District Engineer Commissioner, acted for District Commissioners in presenting the building to the Board of Education and the people of the Anacostia section.

Capt. Bishop reviewed development of the school, first combined junior-senior high school in Washington, from original purchase five years ago of the 8-acre site on Sixteenth street between R and S streets southeast. Col. Dan I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner, originally scheduled to make the presentation, was unable to attend.

Capacity Already Exceeded.

Mrs. William J. Plemmons, president of the Anacostia Parent-Teacher Association, noted that enrollment at the new school already had exceeded its planned capacity. The school was designed to accommodate 1,210 students and the enrollment this year is 1,315, she said.

Mrs. Plemmons urged that the Boar of Education and District Commissioners consider possible construction of a separate junior high school, leaving the present building for use of senior students only.

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, who, as superintendent of schools, sponsored the proposal for a combined school building, explained that the plan had made it easier to obtain appropriation for the school from Congress.

Others who spoke at the exercises were Dr. Chester W. Holmes, assistant superintendent in charge of junior high schools; Jere D. Crane, assistant superintendent in charge of business affairs, and Dr. John Paul Collins, principal of the school.

Total Cost, $800,000.

Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, member of the District Board of Education, presided, and formally accepted the new building for the Board. Music was furnished by the school orchestra, and combined choral classes.

Singing of the National Anthem at the close of the program was marked by the unfurling of the school's electrically controlled movie screen to permit showing the words of the anthem.

Following the formal exercises, the central building and more recent adjoining units, completed last March, were opened for inspection. Built at a cost of nearly $800,000, including price of the site, the structure houses, besides class rooms, an auditorium, cafeteria, two gymnasiums with special folding bleachers; an armory for the student cadet corps, and complete modern office equipment for business training.

Would-Be Victim Captures Suspect In Holdup Attempt

The victim of an attempted robbery captured a would-be holdup man and turned him over to the police last night.

John Thomas Edmonds, 44, of 4500 Eighth street, South Arlington, Va., was sitting in his parked automobile at Eleventh street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, when a stranger swung open the door and moved his hand as though to draw a gun.

"Your money or your life," he said to Edmonds.

Edmonds grappled with the intruder, forced him from the car and called for police. He was holding the would-be robber when Detective William Fawsett arrived and made the arrest.

Ex-Policeman Surrenders in 'Racket' Death

Hook Booked for Inquiry in Killing of Colored Numbers Runner.

Thomas Henry Hook, 32, of 705 Minnesota avenue northeast, a former District policeman, wanted in connection with the murder September 30 near Camp Springs, Md., of Sam Jeffrees, colored numbers runner, surrendered himself last night to Detective Sergt. Robert Barrett. He was locked up in the Twelfth Precinct Station, where he was booked for investigation.

Sergt. Barrett, who is on vacation, said he received a telephone call at his home from a friend of Hook suggesting he go alone to a spot on the Bladensburg road near the District line last night. There he met Hook, he said, who told him he wanted to surrender and "clear up" his connection with the killing.

Hook made no statement, Sergt. Barrett said, beyond saying he has been in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore since Jeffrees was shot. He said, according to Barrett, he would contact a lawyer today.

Two others already have been indicted by a Prince Georges grand jury in the death of Jeffrees. They are Fred Schinman, 39, of the 1300 block of M street northwest, and Frank Guy, colored, 32, of the first block of G street northwest, both of whom are in custody.

Hook and Schinman were near the scene when Jeffrees was shot, according to Edward Cissell, Prince Georges County policeman. He said two men answering their descriptions stopped at his car shortly before the slaying to inquire directions to "Jeffrees' place."

Hook was dismissed from the District police force several years ago.

German Chemists Are Capital Guests Of U.S. Colleagues

Thirty-eight leading chemists and chemical engineers of Germany were guests last night of about 45 American colleagues at a dinner in the Mayflower Hotel. Speeches in English and German called for rapprochement between chemists in the respective countries.

The Germans, headed by Dr. Herbert Bretschneider, director of the triennial chemical exhibition at Frankfort, have been in the United States for several weeks inspecting plants and laboratories. Earlier yesterday a reception was given in their honor at the German Embassy.

Speakers included Dr. Wilhelm Tannenberg, first secretary of the embassy; Dr. A. C. Fieldner, of the Bureau of Mines; Dr. F. G. Lundell, of the Bureau of Standards; Dr. Ben H. Nicolett, president of the Washington Chemical Society; Dr. Charles L. Parsons, secretary of the American; Dr. C. H. Kunsman, of the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils. Paul Wooton, technical journalist, presided. Several American chemists came from Baltimore, Wilmington and Philadelphia for the reception and dinner.

Two Groups Oppose Boost In Token Cost

Third Citizen Association Approves Granting of Higher Fare.

One Protest to Be Made Before Senate and House Committees.

Two citizens' associations last night added their protests to those already on record against the increase in cost of street car tokens, while a third approved the action of the Public Utilities Commission in granting the higher fare.

Protesting the increase were the Randle Highlands and the Northeast Boundary associations. The first association voted to carry its protest to the House and Senate District committees, while the Northeast Boundary group demanded a rehearing on the P. U. C. order.

The Burleith association, which approved the commission's action, also adopted a resolution asking the Department of Commerce and airport officials to request planes to fly higher over the city to avoid disturbing residents' sleep.

Gannon Chosen President.

Martin J. Gannon was elected president of the group. Other officers elected are Gordon E. Clark, vice president, and Geoffrey Creyke, jr., secretary-treasurer. John S. Gorrell was named a delegate to the Federation of Citizens Associations, and H. F. Brown and P. A. Fellows were chosen members of the executive committee.

The Randle Highlands Association, in addition to its action on the transit matter, adopted a resolution opposing the granting of additional liquor licenses of any kind in the section. H. L. Stebbin and G. E. Pray were named delegates to the federation.

The Northeast Boundary Association favored continuing the present system of appointment for members of the Board of Education instead of allowing appointments to be made by the Commissioners as has been suggested. It also recommended combining all recreation activities in the District under the Board of Education.

Oppose Budget Increase.

Citizens of the Cathedral Heights-Cleveland Park Association voted opposition to any increase in the 1939 budget over the 1938 figure, in a meeting at St. Alban's Parish House. They announced change of meeting night to the second Thursday of each month.

The group adopted two resolutions on traffic control, following a talk by M. O. Eldridge, assistant director of vehicles and traffic. The first proposed safeguarding school children in areas where traffic is heavy by setting a time for opening school after the rush hour. They also favored requiring photographs on all driving permits for identification in case of accident.

Railroad Men Differ.

By the Associated Press.

Witnesses before the Interstate Commerce Commission differed yesterday whether the Old Colony Railroad should be separated from the New Haven system. Old Colony expressed a preference at a reorganization hearing to remain a part of the New Haven system, while a creditor group of 14 insurance companies objected.

Lipstick Fails To Turn a Pug Into an Adonis

New York "Talent Quest" Flounders on Boys' Busted Beezers.

By Theon Wright.
By the United Press.

New York, Nov. 9.—Twenty-five slightly used prizefighters polished off their tin ears, rubbed the resin off their bulb noses and filed into the Paramount Theater Building today to find out what it takes to be like Robert Taylor.

They found, among other things, that it takes quite a lot of lipstick.

The occasion was a "talent test" arranged by Boris Kaplan, Hollywood talent scout, at the request of Ernest Lubitsch. Mr. Lubitsch, a hound for originality, conceived the idea of finding an "unknown star" to sparkle in his forthcoming super-colossal, "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife."

Mr. Kaplan was a bit cagey about confessing what the role would be, but newspaper folk who hung around while they unloaded truckloads of former heroes of the "square ring," recruited from Stillman's Gymnasium, neighborhood poolrooms and alleys, decided since none of the candidates wore a beard, it must be the wife's part they were filling.

The News Spread—Like Noses.

Originally only four were invited—Bob Olin, former light-heavyweight champion; Charlie Massera, stablemate of former Champion Jim Braddock; Red Burman, a protege of Jack Dempsey, and Harry Cooper.

By the time the news got around Cauliflower Alley, where the beak-busting business has not been so brisk of late, there was a rush for the Paramount Building, and more were arriving when they shut the doros.

Mr. Kaplan lined them up and explained that they were searching for a "natural comedian."

"We'll start with tragedy," he said. "Mr. Olin, what would you do if your best friend died."

"If my best friend died?" roared Olin. "Haw! Haw! My best friend wouldn' tell me! How's that, pally? Rich, ain't it?"

Mr. Kaplan said it was rich, all right, and passed around some slips of paper with Shakespearian quotations. It developed that quite a few of the boys culdn't read, so he had them recite, "The Boy Stood on the Burning Deck."

Cupid's Bows and Curls.

By this time things were getting out of hand, so Ed Sems, a studio make-up man, was called in to work out on the candidates.

He singled out Eddie Crozier, a veteran of 200 ring battles, who looked as if he had gone the route in every one of them, and prettied up his face with a cupid's bow and a spit curl.

After that Sems said it wasn't any use trying to improve on nature, and passed around lipstick and grease paint and told the boys to go to it.

By the time order was restored, the candidates for the future Mrs. Bluebeard, or friend, looked like a mass meeting of Hopi Indian snake dancers and blackface minstrels on a raspberry bust.

Mr. Kaplan, mopping his fevered forehead, said if there were any stray Barrymores in the crowd, or even a second-hand Bull Montana, he hadn't spotted them, and advised the boys to go back home and wait for another call.

Screen's Own Star, Annabella Harbors No Stage Ambition

Although it is generally accepted in the cinema that stage experience should precede attempts to win fame in pictures, there have been notable exceptions to that rule. One of the best known—and most charming—deflers of the rule has recently come to America after a distinguished screen career abroad. She is Annabella, the winsome Paris-born actress who attained enduring fame in French and British motion pictures before she was signed by Twentieth Century-Fox studios to come to Hollywood.

Aanabella owes nothing to the stage, and has no desire ever to go into footlight dramatics. She began her career in minor roles in motion pictures made in Paris, and rapidly ascended to the peak of screen popularity on the continent. Unequipped with a working knowledge of English, she spent her first four cinema years in French and German speaking films. It was during this period of her career that she first saw Hollywood, when she came to the United States to make foreign-language versions of American productions.

Annabella made her initial bid for fame before English-speaking audiences in the stellar role of "Wings of the Morning," an all-color picture produced by New World Productions in England and released by Twentieth Century-Fox. A world-wide favorable response greeted that effort and she subsequently appeared in two more films at the same studio, "Under the Red Robe" and the soon-to-be released "Dinner at the Ritz." It was while the latter picture was in production that she signed the contract which has since brought her to Hollywood. As her last English-made picture is being released, the blonde screen star is preparing to begin the feminine stellar role in "Jean," with William Powell as her co-star.

Explaining her single-minded devotion to films and lack of interest in the stage, Annabella said:

"I have, of course, many friends on the stage. From them, I have learned something of what stage careers involve. To me, it would seem very boring, indeed, to do the same acts and speeches day after day for the entire run of a play. In the pictures, each new days means new work. The never-ending change can not help but be interesting."

"Dinner at the Ritz" was something of an international undertaking in that the leading featured role in the cast supporting Annabella was played by Paul Lukas, popular with American screen audiences and one of Hollywood's better-known actors. David Niven, English actor who has spent a good deal of his time in Hollywood, also is in the cast, which includes Romney Brent, Stuart Rome and Francis Sullivan.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

Hollywood and Wall Street Given a Gentle Ribbing In 'Stand-In,' a Vivisection of the Movie Racket

Walter Wanger's New Production Pokes Satire and Fun at Studio Chicanery; Benchley Joins Pest Crusade; Joan Bennett No Stranger to Capital; The 'Best of the Month;' Katharine Cornell Again;

BELL.

THIS Walter Wanger, concerning whom a brief, mile-long reference was made in this space yesterday, is a most remarkable fellow. During his week-end visit to the Capital he made hardly so much as a mention of the title of his latest production. This was a serious oversight, because "Stand-In" is an unusual picture in more than one respect, as was borne in upon the guys and gals of the press yesterday afternoon when it was previewed at the usual time and place.

Perhaps foremost among the innovations that "Stand-In" embodies is that it aims its jolly satires at the industry of which Mr. Wanger is so important a part. It kids the trousers off the hit-and-run method of making pictures, as pursued by many of the West Coast's best minds. It also takes a merry whirl at the Wall Street gentlemen, who think in terms of mathematical equations and "units of production" in contemplating the operation of an industry that is motivated by human beings.

Beyond the measure of any other picture that comes to mind, this amusing dissection of motion picture production affords a reasonably authentic glimpse of what goes on "behind the scenes," to design a phrase, when a "super-colossal" feature shows violent signs of going haywire and becoming a monumental dud. Mixed up in this unscrambling of a little known aspect of studio activity, is a Wall Street wizard at figures whose life is lived in graphs and on those funny looking charts that hang on the walls in the board of directors' room. He comes under the guidance of a "stand-in" on the lot who has more grievances than the press agent has adjectives. What he learns is usually described as pullenty.

These roles are played with more than their usual skill by Leslie Howard and Joan Blondell, which seems like a thoroughly incongruous mating of talents—until you see the picture. After that, it becomes apparent that Mr. Wanger, in addition to his other virtues, is a casting director off the top shelf.

"Stand-In" is very elegant entertainment, if you can do with considerable exaggeration and a lot of harmless fun—including a black eye for Mr. "Hamlet" Howard. You will discover that for yourself when you see it at the Capital beginning Friday—the exaggeration and the fun, I mean.

• • • •

Yesterday's preview screenings also included the waggish Robert Benchley's "A Night at the Movies," which strikes a universal note that is wholly on the side of this column's crusade against pests in the theater. Mr. Benchley, in this short subject, not only suffers from a large number of these, but is one on his own account. Honesty seems to have played an important part in Tuesday afternoon's free show!

It is easily understandable after having viewed "Stage Door," at the National, why Joan Bennett on Sunday evening professed such keen pleasure in the delivery of her biting lines aimed at Hollywood. Miss Bennett is one of those rare young actresses who can find enjoyment in lampooning herself. She is Hollywood in the cast.

Although she has not played on the stage in nine years and never has appeared locally otherwise than upon the screen, Joan Bennett is no stranger to Washington. During the Great War, when she was still a wee slip of a gel, an uncle was stationed in the Capital in military service and she was a frequent visitor in his home. She admits, however, that the old town has changed a bit since then. So has Joan.

• • • •

Incidentally, when Manager Edmund Plohn, of the National, tossed his cocktail party in the Mayflower on Sunday more of the theater than Miss Bennett were present. There were, for example, that eminent financier and former newspaper lad, Frank P. Morse, once an incumbent of this desk in a former incarnation; Howard Herrick, crowding close for the deanship of theatrical press agents, here in the interests of "The Ghost of Yankee Doodle," and Harry Kline, another veteran, company manager of "Stage Door" and personal attendant of Miss Bennett. Doctor Morse, by the way, has written a "backstage" book, dealing with his experiences while serving as Henry Miller's right-hand on his transcontinental tours. George M. Cohan has written the foreword. It will be on the bookstands about the first of the year. (Advt.).

So along comes the November 1 issue of the Will H. Hays brochure listing the "Selected Motion Pictures" that his preview committees spanning the country liked in their own private projection rooms. There are four of these catalogued as "Best of the Month," two of which have been seen in Washington and two not.

The first and fourth are "The Great Garrick" and "Stand-In," both of which open on Friday, "Garrick" at the Earle. The other two are "Heidi," opening a repeat engagement at Loew's Columbia tomorrow, and "Lancer Spy," Gregory Ratoff's first effort as a director.

One of this quartet, in the view of this observer, does not belong on any "best" list. However, I bow to the judgment of superior numbers. Fifty thousand preview committees can't be wrong.

Having undergone a major operation on its seating arrangements, the Rialto Theater now is having its acoustics treated. Despite the management's offer to subject the house to any test of hearing, Town Hall will employ a public address system at all of its 20 Sunday evening forum discussions to be held in the erstwhile "Temple of the Muses." And there will be not one measly microphone, but six! That isn't all. If floor discussions threaten to get out of hand, or out of ear, or whatever it is they get out of, a roving "mike" may be installed to insure complete audibility to every member of the audience. Hear! Hear!

Despite subterranean rumbles to the effect that Katharine Cornell would definitely abandon her projected world tour for 1938, contrary bulletins continue to reach this department. The latest, still pregnant with "whens" and "ifs," concerns the Egyptian government's interest in her possible appearance at the Royal Opera House in Cairo and the Javanese Bond van Kunstkringen's anxiety to have her introduce a native author to his people.

Miss Cornell is said to favor the former, "when, as and if," prior to essaying Shakespeare's "Antony and Cleopatra" and it seems that Rudolf Besier, author of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," was born on his grandfather's tobacco plantation near Sourabaya, Java. It's a small world, is what I always say.

• • • •

"Marlboro," of all things, has been chosen as the name of the new motion picture theater to be operated at Upper Marlboro, Md., by Sidney B. Lust, independent Washington exhibitor and film exchange owner. Since the new house is in a town of that name, it was a foregone conclusion that it would be called the "Johannesburg"—or something equally as appropriate.

Tonight, at "half after eight," by the clock, the director general and the assistant director of the Pan American Union are to be hosts to a distinguished invitation list at a "preview of the first of a series of motion pictures taken under the auspices of the Pan American Union." The subjects to be shown include "Rollin' Down to Mexico"—the long-roll you have heard about, no doubt—"Native Arts of Old Mexico" and "Black Gold Beyond the Rio Grande," dealing with the petroleum industry in Mexico.

Pictures of other countries of the Pan American Union will be shown on subsequent occasions.

And then the postman slipped Billy Rose's rotogravure prospectus of his "Show of Shows" under the door. A cursory examination of this symposium of feminine pulchritude suggests that it should have been called "La Vie Parisienne"—except possibly for the copyright. It is that kind of a book. Glad to let you see it for 25 cents a look!

What! That deadline here already?

A Mathematician Learns to Dance

In "Stand-In," the new Walter Wanger production coming to the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater on Friday, the title role is played by Joan Blondell, with Leslie Howard cast as a young industrial engineer, sent to Hollywood to correct economic abuses in picture-making. It is a very droll combination, productive of much kidding of the West Coast. Mr. Howard and Miss Blondell are pictured above in a scene from the picture, counting out their one-two-three-fours.

HOLLYWOOD, Nov. 9.—Idol Chatter: No one can qualify as a thirty-third degree Hollywoodite without first being the victom of one of Carole Lombard's practical jokes. Wonder why so many great stars are bores—and so many screen failures are interestong people? Cited for the Croix de Merite: Gloria Stuart—defying precedent, she had her tonsils out without consulting a publicity man. If any more "Guides-to-Movie-Stars'-Homes" set up shop, they will outnumber the tourists. In a class by itself: The stationery of Eddie Marr, screen villain—it is headed "A Message From Marr."

FRED STONE.

After seeing Virginia Field in her new tennis costume, I have decided it is a great game. Things that amaze me: How Frances Farmer, a level-headed young lady in 1936, can be so snobbish in 1937. The single men who have never dated Rochelle Hudson have formed a club—both of them. Loretta Youngg is "nervous" when driving a car—and so is anyone foolish enough to ride with her. It's the vogue: Hollywood's more stylish husbands now take rooms in the hospital while the Little Woman is there blessed-eventing.

Nice Gesture: Fred Stone invariably says 'good luck" instead of good-by. Wonder if Alice Faye's marriage will discourage the midwestern admirer who has been sending her fan mail proposals on the first of each month? Best off-screen comedy of the week: Jack Oakie teaching Lily Pons to talk American slang—in pig-Latin. Hollywood incongruities: Victor McLaglen's passion for flower culture. Someone must have had a heart-to-heart talk with Simone Simon about the advisability of being nice to people—she is a changed girl since her return from Europe.

Wallace Beery, of all the stars in Hollywood, looks the least like a prima donna—but any publicity man who has worked with him will admit, if caught off-guard, that Wally is difficult. In one breath he blusters about his contempt for publicity; in the next he wails that he is being overlooked by the press. When the studio arranges an interview with him, he usually manages to insult the reporter while telling him nothing. And then, for the next week or two, he camps on the publicity office door-step, waiting for the story to appear. Not long ago he announced that he would not give another interview. Instead of arguing, the crafty publicists rushed out every word of copy possible about Wally's greatest rival. Within a week the would-be Garbo was begging for interviews and threatening to have someone fired if he didn't get them!

FREEMAN GOSDEN, the Amos of Amos 'n' Andy, and Dave Marx, the toy manufacturer, paid $25 each for Row B seats to the premiere of "I'd Rather Be Right." They arrived promptly and walked to the second row. "Sorry," they were told, "but this is the orchestra. Your seats are upstairs." Upstairs they went, sat in Row B, and thumbed their noses at the famous Hollywood producers who were seated behind them . . . Just as the curtain went up the usher asked to see their tickets—because another couple had tickets calling for the very same seats. "This is the first balcony," the usher finally informed. "Your seats are 'way upstairs." And so again the duo moved. After they sat down they looked behind them and saw only two vacant seats—in the very last row of the theater. "Wonder what sucker is stuck with those," they mused . . . They didn't muse for long. The seats were taken by Sam Harris—producer of the show.

What About People Who Have NO MONEY?

WE who have money buy our own food ... pay our own rent ... raise our own children ... and save up for our old age.

But what about people who have no money? Who's going to take care of them?

Let's get this straight. The Government can't do ALL the welfare work ... nor did the Government ever promise to. The President himself has repeatedly said that social work MUST be supported by private gifts.

Any man who thinks that taxes pay for everything his city needs simply doesn't know. Just spend a month in any community where there are no private welfare agencies, and you'll be rolling up your sleeves to start some.

In Washington, the Community Chest has solved this problem for you. It links together sixty-nine separate welfare agencies ... asks you for only ONE gift ... and distributes your money to the organizations YOU select.

Think of it ... sixty-nine separate institutions ... operating through the Chest, at a cost of less than 8%. Contrast this, if you please, with a cost of 20% to 25% when individual agencies were forced to make their own appeals.

Remember, too, in the past ten years our population has increased by 130,000. And as population multiplies, civic problems also multiply, and in the same ratio. That's why our social agencies must have more money in 1938 than they had ten years ago ... more than they received through the Chest for 1937.

Let me clear up another point. This is not an EMERGENCY need. It is a NORMAL cost of civic life. And the Board of Trustees of your Community Chest has voted that in 1938 there shall be no additional appeals by member agencies for current expenses.

Remember also, you do not actually give TO the Chest. Neither do you give TO the social agencies. You give directly to people, THROUGH the organizations which can best help them. The Chest is merely the means of transmitting your money to those you want to help.

People often tell me that they would like to give adequately to those less fortunate, but do not know exactly how much this means in dollars and cents.

What Is My Share?

People without family responsibilities can often give more.

People with larger incomes will in many cases give a proportionately larger per cent.

I have this suggestion to make. If everyone in a position to give would follow the chart shown elsewhere on this page, there would be no more worry about hungry children, hospital care, families broken up by the bitterness of their lives, and youngsters going wrong for lack of a chance to go right.

In my activities for the Community Chest, I have met all kinds of people ... those who give generously ... those who give moderately ... and even a few who will not give at all. I have never quite understood this last group, but Community Chest gifts are voluntary gifts, and conscience plays the major role in giving.

No, the Community Chest isn't perfect. Few man-made agencies are. But it's the most efficient method of welfare financing and distribution that has yet been conceived by man.

It asks for your support ... it demands your interest ... it appeals to you for help ... in the name of hungry children, homeless families, broken lives, suffering humanity.

How shall we meet this problem? How will you face these facts?

What about people who have no money?

Dancing Team At Blue Room Likes Capital

Ramon and Renita Meet Friends From Other Cities Here.

By Chanticleer

Ramon and Renita are having a delightful time in Washington. The celebrated dance team is saluted by friends from all over the country—Chicago, New York and the West Coast. As though you wouldn't know, they are appearing nightly in the Blue Room at the Shoreham.

Once every evening or so you can count on some extra surprise in the Blue Room, too, such as the other night when Brooks Johns left his table and claimed the lovely Renita for his partner—and then bowled over the ringsiders with an impromptu dance.

Henri Therrien, painter of songs, and a lovely Spanish dancer, La Trianita, complete the show with Barnee leading the orchestra for dancing.

Bravos for the enterprising salesman who took his product to the Madrillon the other night to show musicians just how they sound in their native precincts. The device was a recording machine. The band and soloist, Helen Forrest, were recorded just as they played for the dancers. Then the salesman (smart fellow) played the record back. Who wouldn't want to have a gadget like that around?

Nightly floor show now at Boulevard Farms, on the Memorial highway. High spot is a little girl with the most remarkable name—Eulalia Salt. You can laugh at that name, mister, but be prepared to applaud the gal's dancing. She does acrobatic and toe specialties. Big Apple Night every Friday . . . "Mac is back" is the cry this week at Brinkley's, the popular Southeast gathering spot. Mac is a musician who comes and goes, month in and month out. This week "Mac is back."

Tala and Jaime, pictured elsewhere on this page, are heading the bill at the Lotus this week, featuring a novelty bell number. Tala and Jaime have been with Paul Whiteman and frequent the better after-darkeries over the country in their itinerary. Georgie Trainer is on deck with rhythm taps and Bernice Jarnot specializes in control waltz and Oriental acrobatic numbers. The show, one of the largest of the year, uses the dancing Alberta Belles as a background. Al Strickland and his boys provide the music.

Music at the Pall Mall Room of the Raleigh for luncheon, cocktails and dinner hours, as well as the supper period. Sonny Kendis and his orchestra feature request tunes. You name it and they'll play it. . . . A new revue opens today at Bamboo Gardens featuring York and Lewis, comedy dance team; Lucille Davies, modern dance interpreter; Mary Martin, dynamic little songstress, and Bill McIntyre, Washington's own versatile emmcee.

Claire Gregorie, also pictured on this page, tells us what an entertainer does in her own time, between working hours. It seems Claire was standing in front of the Mayfair, where she sings nightly, impatiently patting her toe on the sidewalk. He was late. It seems that he also is professionally employed and the two have a terrible time working out their I'll-see-yous and I'll-take-you-homes without running into conflicts.

On the Night Club Floors

Tala and Jaime are on view this week at the Lotus starring in the season's largest floor show at this popular downtown restaurant. Below: Claire Gregorie, blonde songstress now featured at the Mayfair.

Post Selects 15 Successful Baby-Namers

Odd Names Give Editor Trouble in 'Off-the-Record' Contest.

Tired, haggard, and mumbling "Ikky, Wikky and Wokky, Biff, Buzz and Boo," etc., The Post's Contest Editor, in charge of selecting the best names for Ed Reed's unnamed "Off the Record" babies, emerged yesterday from a flock of entries to announce he had made his selections.

Washingtonians swamped the Contest Editor's office with names ranging from "Moe, Bo and Jo to Eleanor, Franklin and Delano. Statements which accompanied the names on "Why I Like 'Off the Record,'" also varied considerably in content.

In all, 15 entries were chosen to compete in the national contest, which offers $400 in cash prizes. The 15 winning names will be sent immediately to Ed Reed, whose comic strip cartoon appears daily in The Post. Names will then be entered in competition with entries submitted to other papers throughout the country. No local prizes will be given in the contest unless won in the national competition.

The 15 names finally selected to be entered in the national competition were submitted by:

Mrs. C. R. Roberts, 3308 McKinley Street; Mrs. M. Chambers Mehaffey, 1533 Foxhall road northwest; A. M. Stephens, U. S. Soldiers' Home; N. W. Harman, 4001 Sheets avenue, Brentwood, Md.; Cornelia Whitney, 3041 Sedgwick street northwest; Catharine Hessler, 218 S street northeast; Miss Miriam W. Huddle, 104 Northbrook Lane, Bethesda, Md.; Frances Woltz, 3738 Chesapeake street northwest; Allie M. Herren, 4112 Gault place northeast; Mrs. Lacy G. Yeago, 3800 New Hampshire avenue northwest; Robert Eilertson, 1027 Munitions Building; Flora A. Myers, 822 Connecticut avenue; Benjamin C. Chappelear, Delaplane, Va.; Dorothy G. Norris, 117 South Chelsea Lane, Bethesda, Md., and Louis R. Huber, 19 Woodland ave., Takoma Park, Md.

A few of the winning names included such combinations as Iff, Biff and Jiff; Al, Cal and Sal, and Ikky, Wikky and Wokky. A few of the winning statements were: "I like Ed Reed's cartoons because they help me take life with a bigger grin" and "I like 'Off the Record' because it is true to human nature and reminds me of things I have seen and heard."

Under the rules of the contest, all entries will be sent to Reed.

League to Discuss Conservation Plan

The Department of the Interior should never be made the Department of Conservation, says the Izaak Walton League national headquarters, and the Washington chapter will debate the issue at the Raliegh Hotel at 8 o'clock tonight. J. H. Collingwood, of the American Forestry Association, will be in charge of the debate.

Proponents of a Federal wild life sanctuary on the Potomac from Alexandria to Mount Vernon also will give their views. Dr. Paul Bartsch, curator of the National Museum, will head this discussion.

Mission Appeal Head Named by Lutherans

The Rev. Carl C. Rasmussen, pastor of the Luther Place Lutheran Church, has been appointed director of the anniversary appeal of the board of the American Missions of the United Lutheran Church in America for this area, it was announced yesterday.

Through the anniversary appeal, it is expected to obtain "direly needed" funds to enlarge the church extension program.

American Oil Co. Workers Walk Out

Union officials yesterday claimed to have tied up operations of the American Oil Co. in the Washington area by a strike involving 53 employes of the Rosslyn and South Washington plants. A simultaneous strike involves about 100 workers in the Curtis Bay plant of the company in Baltimore.

E. C. Conarty, secretary-treasurer of the International Association of Oil Field, Gas Well and Refinery Workers of America, an affiliate of the C. I. O., accused the company of "bad faith" in not having fulfilled a verbal commitment concerning wages and a 40-hour week. The agreement, according to Conarty, was to have become effective October 1.

James Carney, of Baltimore, general sales manager of the company, and one of a committee which participated in conferences with the union, said, however, that an agreement affecting the Curtis Bay plant had been put into effect October 1, and that another agreement concerning the workers at Rosslyn and South Washington, was in process of negotiation when the strike was called. Affected by the strike are 63 Lord Baltimore filling stations in and near the District of Columbia and some 500 independent stations.

Planning Boards Now Number 2,100

In response to efforts of the National Resources Committee to stimulate local and State planning, and to encourage decentralization of planning activities, 400 county planning agencies and more than 1,700 town and city boards have been set up, the committee reported last night.

Forty-six State planning boards are now functioning, according to the "progress report," made to the President by Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, committee head. Encouragement has been given intercounty planning in districts, interdistrict planning in States and interstate planning in regions, with consultants aiding major projects of water shortage and flood control in the Red River of the North, and in the upper Rio Grande valley.

Postoffice to Need 2,700 Extra Clerks

The Washington postoffice will employ 2,700 extra clerks, carriers and laborers to handle an anticipated record-breaking Christmas rush, under an allotment of $97,686.37, Postmaster Vincent Burke announced yesterday.

The number of applications for such jobs each year far exceeds the number of possible placements, Burke said. Extra work, he asserted, will go, in order, to eligible postal substitutes, war veterans and persons with dependents. Special consideration will be given applicants who have had such employment in previous years and are familiar with routine.

The extra force will go on duty December 16 or 17 and be needed from three days to a week. Clerks and carriers will receive 65 cents an hour and laborers 55 cents. Only a few women will be employed because of the heavy nature of the work.

Hundreds Inspect Braille Library

Several hundred persons crowded into the National Library for the Blind, 1126 Twenty-first street northwest, yesterday for a tea given by the board of directors and an exhibit of the library's work.

Books in Braille were on display while the library's six sightless attendants gave demonstrations of proofing and binding of "talking books," and of how the printed volumes are wrapped and mailed to all parts of the world.

According to Mrs. Gwynn, orders for about 40 books are received each day. Volumes are mailed out, "read" by subscribers, and returned to the library. The total collection numbers about 14,000. The library also has magazines, and music now can be transcribed in Braille for the benefit of blind musicians.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Bitterly Disappointed in Marriage to Divorced Man, Woman Thinks of Leaving Him; Asks Advice.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 30-odd years old. A few years ago I married a divorced man with children to support. Before I resigned my position to marry him he assured me he could amply provide for all of us. At that time I had a fair-sized bank account, a comfortable apartment, an excellent job and could afford certain luxuries. Since we have been married, my husband has lost two good jobs—the last one through his own fault. In addition to being unemployed for a third of the time since our marriage (due to these lost jobs) he was once jailed for being in arrears with his alimony payments. Yet this could have been avoided had he notified the court of the circumstances.

* * * *

When he is without work, his disposition is fine. But when he is working he is hot-tempered, nagging and very domineering. He is forever belittling the town or city to which we are assigned, complaining about the traffic regulations, the streets, the people in general, until it's positively disgusting. Don't think I am without faults. When he loses his temper, I retaliate, for I don't feel that I am justified in swallowing any insults from him after all I have put up with. Each time he has been out of work he insists that I go to live with my people, and he spends part of the time there, which embarrasses me considerably.

* * * *

I have lost all love I ever had for him. He claims to love me very much but I don't see how he could embarass and insult me if he really loved me. I have been deliberating whether or not to leave him. In fact, I have been reviewing my shorthand with a view to making my own living again.

* * * *

Please tell me, if you were in my position, what would you do? I am not getting any younger, and as things stand there is no guarantee of any livelihood for me as his wife in my declining years. As soon as we accumulate a little money, he buys an expensive car (he had three automobile wrecks in less than a year), and expensive liquors. He isn't a drinking man, but likes to make a display before his friends. Really, I haven't told the half of my story, but I hope you get enough from this to advise me. What do you think I should do?

BEFUDDLED.

The Thing to Do.

DEAR BEFUDDLED: It looks as though you were learning through painful experience just how-come the man's first marriage didn't last. I think he's made it pretty plain that he isn't first-class matrimonial timber. If this had been first marriage for both of you, I might have suggested the man simply wasn't harness-broken yet and might have outlined various courses of action a wife could pursue in endeavoring to corect his reckless, undisciplined, irresponsible attitude. But since he broke over the traces once, in spite of having children to support, and has subsequently led the successful business woman who was yourself (before you married him), a bruising chase, I am forced to the conclusion that he is not material worth working with.

* * * *

Since you neither love nor respect him; cannot look to him for support; find him a drain on your family's resources, as well as your own, and haven't the patience to deal tactfully with his temper tantrums, I cannot see that any constructive purpose is served in continuing to live with him. However, if you are not yet prepared in your own mind to go through with divorce, why not stop in your tracks, so to speak, get a job in the city where you worked before, tell him you intend to remain there; that you are done with galloping about the country on wild-goose chases, and that if he expects to remain your husband he will simply have to settle down in the same city, find work, and face up to his obligations, and the more or less monotonous routine of unpretentious everyday living, like the man he is old enough to be.

* * * *

Men of this type, when and if they finally settle down to lasting marriage, usually do so under the level-headed management of some practical minded woman who leads, rather than consents to be led. Essentially, they are leaners, clinging vines of the masculine gender, spoiled children at heart; and, like spoiled children, their real respect, deepest affection and half-awed obedience accrues to the person who cooly governs them with calm an demotional authority; who lets them know that if they will be good, they can be comfortable, and if they are naughty, they can take the consequences. M. H.

Message for "C. J."

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: As an out-of-town subscriber to The Post, I wish to send a word of help through your column to "C. J.," the 22-year-old girl who is an unmarried, expectant mother and whose letter, asking advice, was published November 5. Miss Haworth, six years ago I found myself in the same position as that girl. I was older than she; I was 27; old enough, you will say, to know better. But like "C. J.," I loved the man, and when some women really love they often do things which the world calls foolish, or worse.

* * * *

I bore this man's child—a little girl. Afterward he seemed to care both for the child and for me. Yet, like "C. J." I had my troubles. But when I went to live with this man I decided to stick it out, come what may, for this is a world in which we have to learn to take it on the chin. I lived with him for two years after the birth of our child. Suddenly one day he came home, told me to dress in my best, that we were getting married that afternoon. We were married and I have never been sorry, for today I have love of my husband, I still have my baby and I have a nice home.

* * * *

Remember, "C. J.," you owe something to your child. You owe him a name for one thing. Sometimes it is hard to explain to a stranger such cases as ours. So I am suggesting that you stick it out with the man until after the baby comes and you are well again. Then you can think more sensibly; then it will be time enough to decide what is best to do next. I have no use for a mother who will desert her child.

* * * *

Miss Haworth, I am not the sort of person who can put down on paper what she feels and wishes to say. But I hope you can understand what I am trying to tell "C. J." I think you give such good advice to everyone who writes you. Sincerely yours, MRS. R. J. B.

Day or Evening, Shoes Echo the Glamour Trend

Suede and rubberized gabardine fashion the smartly swathed step-in afternoon or informal evening shoes at right. The materials and styling are elegant, at the same time stressing comfort and a "corseted" look for the feet. Gold mesh, a mediaeval influence inspired by coats of mail, combines with gold kid (also available in silver) for the glamorous evening shoes below. This season's formal shoes are romantic in theme and materials but furnish more coverage for the feet than those of last winter.

Glitter and Elegance Spreading To Shoes, New Modes Reveal

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

IN THIS mad trend to get elegance and glitter in our lives, feet are vying with silhouettes, and the newest shoes rival dresses and ensembles in their dazzling materials and period-influence designs. You can't don a dress for either daytime or evening that flaunts opulence and romance and then add shoes that are simple and characterless—shoes that have no background to boast of. Glamour has spread to the entire costume and shoes are of tremendous importance if one is to be classed as a follower of the mode.

In evening shoes particularly, there are numerous trends that receive inspiration from bygone eras of romance and elegance. Edwardian shoes of rich materials are among the most popular. Also, there are shoes combining meshes of gold or silver kid with the solid leather in the same color, which were inspired by a current French drama about the Knights of the Round Table, in which the characters wore costumes of gold or silver mail. Other evening shoes are of tinted satin, brocade, lame, or combinations of metal cloth with solid-color satin. These are sandals, built-up affairs, or shoes which lace up the ankle with ribbon in self-color.

Daytime shoes to accompany afternoon clothes or dinner dresses of street or floor length are not as complicated in design as the formal evening versions, but they are elegant in appearance. New leathers and fabrics, which have rubber in their composition, are being merged with suede for smart styles which have a glove-fitting look. These undoubtedly were inspired by the Padova "bandaged" evening shoes which were considered so startling last winter. Shiny and dull leathers are fashioned into well-fitted shoes, cut high in front with interesting pipings and inserts of contrasting leathers. Others in suede combine two or more colors in their contribution to this imperative glamour trend.

Shine Remover.

To remove some of the shine from serge garments put the garments on an old blanket or a heavy cloth. Sponge each one with hot vinegar and cover it with a cloth rinsed in cold water. Press with a hot iron—continuing to press until the garment is dry.

To Reheat Vegetables.

Add a little liquid—gravy, sauce, water or milk—to leftover vegetables and meat to be reheated. Then cover them tightly and allow them to heat at a low temperature for 10 minutes. Overcooking them will leave them dry and tasteless.

Translation Into Spanish Spurs Calls for Child Happiness Book

Bulletin of Children's Bureau, by Miss Blanche Weill, Ed. D., Charts Cheerful Course for Baby From Cradle Days.

By Genevieve Reynolds.

MODERN parents seem to want above everything else that their children should be happy.

The announced reprint into Spanish of the ever-popular "happiness" bulletin of the Children's Bureau has greatly increased demands for the document in the English version. Aproximately 500,000 copies of the booklet have been distributed in the original form.

This series of 12 lessons in child psychology is the work of Blanche C. Weill, Ed. D., of the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor. Miss Weill was formerly psychologist with Dr. D. A. Thom, director of the habit clinics of Boston.

Starting with the baby in his cradle, the booklet shows how his course of happiness may be charted. Here are some questions a mother may ask herself to determine whether or not the baby is happy: Does he laugh and coo while you work? Does he play quietly by himself while you work? Does he like the food you give him? Is he ready and willing to go to bed at bed time? Does he play happily with other children? If the answer to these questions is affirmative then the baby is happy and good.

Good Habits Stressed.

On the other hand, if the baby cries all day, kicks, screams and spits out food, does not beg to be put to bed, teases the new baby and is irritable, then he is not happy and you should seek a remedy.

Miss Weill, author of the buletin, says: "We can help you make your baby happy, but you must help too. You must try very hard and never stop trying. If you always give him what he wants he will not be happy long."

The author emphasizes the importance of teaching the child good habits from his birth or by feeding him at exactly the same time every day, permitting him to sleep after every feeding. "Do not feed him just bcause he cries but let him wait until the right time," says Miss Weill, "and his stomach will learn to wait. His mind will learn that he cannot get things by crying. In doing this, you do two things for your baby at the same time. You teach his body good habits and you teach his mind good habits.

Don't Ask Him If He Likes It.

If you would have your child form good food habits make every meal a happy, quiet time. Prepare food that is good for him; see that his little hands are clean before he eats. See that he sits down quietly at the table. Serve each child a little of each food and eat some of everything yourself. Never ask your child or anyone else where the child can hear you 'do you like this?'"

To avoid or cure tantrums in a child pay no attention to him when he kicks and screams and he will soon stop, says Miss Weill. If children see that they can get attention by being good, they will be not only good, but will keep busy and happy too, according to the bulletin.

Parents who expect obedience from their children should not demand unimportant things but should be careful in deciding what the most important things are. For example, see that your child understands the things that are important and make sure that he hears, for often he is playing so hard that he does not hear you. Don't let him do something one day and punish him the next day for doing the same act. Once you have told him to do something, see that he obeys you. Don't try to bribe him to obey you and don't frighten him to do what you want.

Keep Him Interested.

"There is only one good reason to punish a child," explained Miss Weill, "that is to make him understand that he must not do the naughty thing again. Some children are naughty just to get attention. The best punishment for them is not to pay any attention to them. Keep your child so busy with interesting things that he will not have time to be naughty."

A jealous person is never happy, maintains Miss Weill. He is always selfish and very angry when another gets ahead of him. He does not work well with others and will not do his best, for he thinks everyone is against him. You can make a child jealous—by pretending to love the new baby better or by saying, "Why aren't you a good boy like your brother?"

"Growth means happiness for the child if it is normal," says Miss Weill. "You must help your child to understond the things about him. Teach your child to use his hands and body for this is as important as teaching him to read and write. To do this let him use tools. He can learn to balance and control his body by climbing stairs or a ladder or a fence in the back yard, or by helping you to serve the dessert at dinner. Never talk about your child's slowness or smartness before him. If he is bright he will get conceited; if he is slow he will get his feelings hurt."

The old-fashioned sour cream recipes, beaten biscuits, ham, pound cake and puddings have been successfully made by generations of famous cooks. Perhaps it was your great-aunt or your grandmother who first gave you the recipe. It might have been obtained from an old cookbook. These recipes deserve their fame. They are quaint, historic and practical even for the modern cuisine.

Man's Ties Made To Please Woman

New York (AP).—Men are the people who wear men's clothing, but women are the people who buy much of it. Seven of every ten Christmas ties, for example, will be bought by females.

Hence, while the clothes must be designed to appeal ultimately to men, for maximum sales they must also catch the eye of women shoppers.

Some of the new neckties have patterns illustrating legends; not because men care much about legends, but because the legends appeal to feminine romantism. Few to fabrics are satin and hand-loomed wool; not because men know satin from wool, but because satin means "expensive" to a woman and hand-loomed wool is what she'd like to have for a dress.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Nov. 9.

I HAVE just had a good go at two movie stars who have been such since they were knee-high to Shirley Temple. Frankness, and not the old-time goose-grease, is now the keynote of interviews with screen sweeties, as I learned while Loretta Young and Janet Gaynor were glamoring up the town.

ALICE HUGHES.

The press dropped several stitches when Loretta said that "Tyrone Power is a dear, sweet boy, but was a sap to give up Sonja Henie. She's an angel!" "What about Janet Gaynor, his current crush?" asked the swooning reporters. "She's an angel, too," said La Young, and scurried off in a cloud of gas fumes to shop. Here was her dizzy day: Lunch at the Colony, fanciest of feminine showcases, at noon. Three evening gowns at Hattie Carnegie's, four hats at Lilly Dache's, four cocktails at the Madison Bar (so smart), dinner with Clifton Webb at the famed penthouse of Conde Nast, and to the Rainbow Room and El Morocco later. And when she was stepping smartly on the floor at 3 a. m., someone asked why Loretta Young had come to town this time. "Working like a horse; needs a rest," she said. Haw, and again, haw!

Janet Gaynor got around a lot, too, but took it easier. She has a fine two-films-a-year contract now for adult roles, instead of the slush she was forced to play for years. Is she happy? "I know a lot of my pictures have been trashy," says the little redhead, "but what could I do? How many good novels or plays come out a year? In the simple roles they've given me, what else could I be but simple? Heaven knows I like a mature part, but where is it??" Everything the tiny veteran says makes sense. Nice, smart little girl, make no mistake.

That cleaned up the flicker situation in a crazy week!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—"Men are attracted to women with deep voices," says Mrs. Allys Vergara, speech teacher at the College of New Rochelle, and points to Katharine Cornell, Judith Anderson and Margaret Sullavan as examples of barytone allure. She says such tones are also needed in society and business, and points again to the Duchess of Windsor. All very well, Allys old pet, but we can't all sing bass, and some of us with high and feeble pipes manage to edge by all right! . . .

* * * *

Speaking of the noted Cornell, she will probably abandon her projected tour of the world in repertoire, owing to the tragic commotion now going on. It was on a trip to plan this tour that her much-loved press agent, Ray Henderson, met his death in a Grecian plane crash. A bad start, indeed, that was . . .

* * * *

Still peering at stars, Gertrude Lawrence, of "Susan and God," is an expert with the needle and thread, and always offers to sew on buttons for underprivileged people like us reporters! . . .

* * * *

One of our better millinery creators is a lad named Elliot Dushane. He told me the other day that he is one of eight children—the other seven being girls who can't sew well enough to solder a ripped seam! . . .

* * * *

During the visit of George Burns and Gracie Allen in our muddled midst, Sandra and Ronnie, their two adopted treasures, seemed to get the most fun out of riding the elevators at the Savoy-Plaza. How unknowingly lucky kids are to get so much fun out of trivia, when we oldsters are forced to battle creeping boredom to keep going at all! I should talk—I'm almost never bored!

* * * *

When Mrs. Harrison Williams, perennial best-dressed woman chugged in on the Bremen she was wearing a dress of turquoise blue, a long tailored coat of prune wool and a turned-up hat that matched both. She was also towing an undecided pooch named Mickey, which she calls a "Capri terrier" for want of a better and more definite breed. Mona looked so smart and handsome that the ship shutter-snappers had their usual field day with her on the boat deck. Her duds ever make news (of a modest enough sort), for what Mona wears today, Minnie wears tomorrow.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

Columbia U. Students Prefer Madelaine Carroll, Ex-School Teacher.

By Ida Jean Kain.

COLUMBIA University undergraduates prefer Madeleine Carroll. Some lad with an imagination too free to be hampered by the confines of Manhattan Island thought up this question: "With which movie star would you rather be stranded on a desert island?"

Almost to a mna the vote was in favor of that beauteous blonde, Madeleine. Oddly enough, they chose a former school marm—but who would ever think of Miss Carroll as a required course?

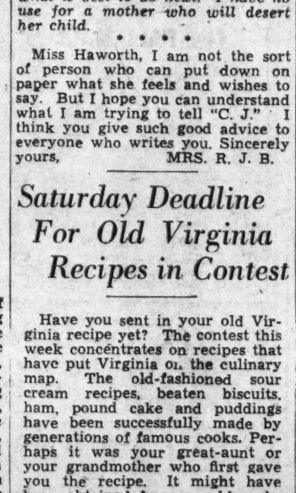
Perhaps the reason Miss Carroll has almost overnight become a universal favorite is that aside from her undeniable beauty there is no mystery about her. She is utterly lacking in any superficiality. She taught school and she likes to keep house.

Beauty Not Expensive.

Miss Carroll's beauty program is not expensive or complicated and there is no foolishness about milk baths or weird diets. Anyone can follow it. Swimming, relaxation, sunshine and sleep are this star's beauty aids. She believes that swimming is the best exercise any woman can take for building or slimming the figure Sunshine, but in moderation, is her complexioin balm and she finds she must have a minimum of eight hours' sleep a night to look her best.

Because she swims so much, Miss Carroll needs no additional calisthenics or posture exercises to keep fit. Her figure is perfect. She is 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighs 119 pounds and has the following measurements: Bust, 36 inches; waist, 24 inches; hips, 36 inches.

She has a healthy and hearty appetite and admits a liking for food but never permits her weight to exceed 124 pounds. Common sense in the selection of food enables her to control her weight without resorting to a strenuous diet.



Regular exercise has a definite place in the beauty program of Madeliene Carroll.

Sports Preserve Figure.

I find that all of the Hollywood beauties value relaxation. Miss Carroll sets aside half an hour each day for complete relaxation. No matter how hectic the day on the lot, you will find her resting—lying down, listening to the radio, sometimes between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

The girl who has a favorite sport in which she engages regularly is much more likely to keep her figure lovely than the girl who takes occasional calisthenics. Daily relaxation is a much better wrinkle-chaser than a facial now and then. Sensible eating makes weight control fairly easy. There, in essence, you have the beauty program of a beauty.

Best Seller's Discoverer Speaks Here

Macmillan Official Relates How He Found 'Gone With the Wind.'

Miss Mitchell Unwilling to Release Book, Newswomen Told.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

"Gone With the Wind"—the novel still more widely discussed in Washington society than any other—was the topic yesterday following a brief speech by H. S. Latham, the Connecticut Yankee, who discovered the best seller on the South and started the author on the road to fame.

The occasion was the weekly luncheon of the Women's National Press Club at the Willard Hotel.

At the close of his general discussion on books and their makers, Mr. Latham who, incidentally, is vice president of the Macmillan Co., shattered some erroneous ideas as to how the book came to be published in recounting his experience regarding it. He was on a book-scouting tour in 1934, when he stopped in Atlanta and happened to meet Miss Mitchell, or rather Mrs. Marsh, as she is known there. Having been informed she had been working on a novel, he asked her about it, but she stoutly denied having a book either finished or in the process of being written. Later, however, shortly before he was leaving Atlanta to continue the trip across the country, she appeared at his hotel with a huge manuscript bearing the tentative title, "Tomorrow Is Another Day." That mass of material was to become "Gone With the Wind"—but not without a struggle.

Asks Return Of Manuscript.

When Mr. Latham arrived in New Orleans he found a telegram awaiting him from Mrs. Marsh, saying, in effect, "Send back my manuscript; I have changed my mind."

"I never received that telegram," said Mr. Latham with a puckish twinkle in his eye," so when I got to San Francisco there was another, even more insistent."

His reply was the offer of a contract for publication. A few suggestions for changes and additions followed, and a few months later "Gone With the Wind" came from the press. In addition to becoming a best seller in almost no time, the book is now being translated into 24 languages, and Margaret Mitchell's name and fame have gone around the world. But success hasn't changed the author in the least, Mr. Latham revealed in answering the barrage of questions after his talk. The author still lives in the same apartment, has the same servant and follows much the same manner of living as she did before, he said.

Preceding his discussion of "Gone With the Wind" and its author, Mr. Latham recounted some of his other experiences in discovering authors in this country and in England, and mentioned that among most of the writers and would-be writers he has met recently, women predominate. In Washington for the past two days to confer with authors, Mr. Latham will leave today.

Tea Will Honor Miss Szechenyi

Society Marks Day of Fete to Be Given by Wife of Hungarian Envoy.

Society is sharpening its red pencils and circling November 23 on its calendars—the date of the tea dance to be given by the wife of the Hungarian Minister, Mme. Pelenyi, in honor of Miss Sylvia Szechenyi.

It will be remembered that Miss Szechenyi was presented to society last summer at an eye-opening party at the fabulous Breakers, Newport mansion of the Vanderbilts, when 800 guests rode up the flood-lighted drive. Last winter she made her bow in Budapest.

At the time of the Newport festivities, a Washington presentation was wished and hoped for. It has come true . . . although the affair is not strictly a "coming out" party for the much debut-ed Sylvia. It will serve, however, for her to renew her Washington friendships, of which she has many, since her father, Count Szechenyi, was Hungarian Minister here himself for many years. Her mother, Countess Szechenyi, was the former Gladys Vanderbilt.

Further flashbacks on the Szechenyi girls will recall to your mind that Alice, after a Washington debut, married Count Bela Hadik; that Cornelia became Mrs. Eugene Bowie Roberts, now of this city, and that Gladys is now Viscountess Maidstone, living alternately in Switzerland and England.

Significance of P.-T. A. Stressed at Institute

Dean Ruediger, of G. W. U., Calls Movement One of Most Potent Influences in Schools; Stand Against Spoils System Affirmed.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

The Parent-Teacher movement is one of the most significant social developments we have and one of the most potent influences in our schools, Dean W. C. Ruediger, provost of George Washington University, told Parent-Teacher Association members yesterday morning at opening session of the two-day institute sponsored by the District P.-T. A. Congress, with co-operation of the university at Corcoran Hall.

The board of the District organization prepared to make this influence felt when it met following the institute program and reaffirmed its stand for retention of control of the Board of Education in Washington as it now exists. Members of the P.-T. A. are exercised over possibility of the spoils system being extended into the schools and are ready for action when the matter comes before Congress. The board also reaffirmed its stand in favor of keeping school playgrounds under supervision of the Community Center.

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, asserted he had always believed in the Parent-Teacher Association and given it every assistance. "As a co-operative organization," he declared, "I feel it is more essential now than ever before."

Mrs. Pettengill Talks on Movement.

Chief speaker of the institute yesterday was Mrs. J. K. Pettengill, president of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, who discussed the parent-teacher movement. The home has re-created on many fronts which the school has taken up, said Mrs. Pettengill, but without a certain interest from the home the school cannot carry on successfully.

"The parent of today must be a different one from that of a generation ago," she said, "to fit into the modern pattern. I do not agree with those who believe the home is losing the child's picture of life; the home is adjusting itself to that picture.

"Education is the only guarantee that our democracy will endure and our democracy will depend on our attitude toward education. Unless we have goals, we shall flounder.

"We must decide how we want a child to develop. One objection must be to bring out in him a feeling of individual responsibility for his acts, and ability to realize the resources of his own surroundings to reach independent conclusions. The school more than the home accomplishes this.

"Another objective should be the attainment of social maturity which makes it possible for him in his learning to face reality with high ideals and to co-operate wisely in terms of goals and not of personalities," said Mrs. Pettengill. "The third objective is attainment of a social consciousness, awakening him to concern in things which affect community life. The fourth is development of a fine response to the worthwhile culture of the race. The school has done much in this direction, but the home must help."

Mrs. Walter Fry Presides at Session.

Mrs. Walter B. Fry, president of the District congress, presided at yesterday morning's meeting and Mrs. Harry N. Stull, first vice president, at the afternoon session which included discussion of program building, and talk on parliamentary procedure by Willard Hayes Yeager, professor of public speaking at the university. Discussion leaders in the morning were Mr. Joseph N. Saunders, past president of the D. C. Congress, and Robert L. Haycock, first assistant superintendent of schools, and, in the afternoon, Mrs. O. G. Hankins and Miss A. Grace Lind.

This morning Dr. Thomas W. Gosling, first vice president of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, will preside and Dr. Mitchell Dreese, associate professor of psychology at George Washington, will discuss child study groups for parents. In the afternoon Miss Ellen C. Lombard, associate specialist in parent education in the Office of Education, will speak on "The Joint Responsibility of Home and School in Childhood Education." This evening at the closing dinner at the Y. M. C. A., Willard W. Beatty, of the Office of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, will discuss "Preparing High School Students for Home and Marriage." Mr. Beatty is known as an educator with progressive ideas and came to Washington from Bronxville, N. Y., where he inaugurated many of the modern methods which characterize that city's school system.

Discussion leaders this morning will be Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, of the Board of Education, and Prof. Carl Douglas Wells.

War Blamed On Two 'Isms'

Communism and Fascism Hit by Mrs. Hankin Before A. A. U. W.

The foremost cause of impending war is the conflict between communism and fascism, aided by national aggrandizement and race hatred, declared Mrs. Charlotte Hankin last night in an address at a dinner sponsored by the International Relations Committee of the Washington Branch of the A. A. U. W.

Mrs. Hankin, Washington attorney and member of the United States Supreme Court Bar, also Crusade International Fellow of the American Association of University Women, painted a dark picture of war preparedness in Russia, Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Italy, France and England.

In the democratic countries of Czechoslovakia, Switzerland, England and France, she found much opposition to both "isms," with a distinctly more favorable leaning toward communism as against fascism. In the semi-fascistic countries of Poland, Hungary and Austria, interest in communism was proscribed and there was a definite leaning toward fascism, but of the Italian, rather than German, type. In Germany and Italy, the antagonism to communism was open and belligerent. The direct manifestation of this is the Spanish civil war, she said.

Poland is seething with preparedness for war, fearing Russia on the one hand and Germany on theo ther, she asserted. Hungary is chafing under her partition by the Treaty of Trianon and keeps, as a reminder to the old and young, a flag at half mast under which is the slogan, ever illuminated: "This flag shall not be raised until our land is restored to us again." Czechoslovakia lives in constant fear of attack from Germany, Poland and Hungary. In Autria, Mrs. Hankin found gloom and despair and fear of Germany on the one hand and Italy on the other.

Italy she described as an armed camp. Every third man seemed to her to be in uniform. Boys and girls, and even children hardly able to walk, are trained as defenders of the realm, she said.

Switzerland, always a neutral and peaceful nation, has undertaken a preparedness campaign. In France there is constant fear of the recurrence of the days of 1914. France is spending billions for war and lives in constant horror of German aggression and revenge. "If Italy was correctly described to me as an armed camp," Mrs. Hankin said, "Germany is a huge arsenal."

ANOTHER of the series of Wednesday silver teas will be given today by the League of Republican Women, with Mrs. William S. Culbertson, one of the vice presidents, as hostess. Members and their guests will call at the new club house between the hours of 3 and5.

It was a little difficult for the prospective hostess to agree to the "silver tea" idea, where the guests pay for the refreshments, but it was finally decided on as an appropriate means of adding to the league's fund for party work, all is a good cause. So, they are having the teas each Wednesday with one of the vice presidents receiving and "now is the time for all good women to come to the aid of the party."

Mme. Cantacuzene, president of the league; Mrs. Edward E. Gann, Mrs. Mondell, first vice president, who was hostess at last week's party, and other prominent Republican women will be among those in the company this afternoon.

Washington Club Hears Members' Travel Talks

Mrs. Safford, Miss Berryman, Mrs. Hill and Mrs. McKinley Describe Experiences in Europe, the Orient and Ireland.

Trips through the British Isles, Europe and the Far East were described to the Washington Club yesterday morning by several of the members on a program arranged by Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor. Mrs. William E. Safford reviewed her summer in Europe; Miss Florence Berryman told of her bus trip through England, Mrs. Earl M. McKinley, of her experience in the Philippines and the Orient and Mrs. William H. Hill, of her pilgrimage to Ireland in search of the homes of her ancestors.

Mrs. McKinley was in the East for six months with her husband, who was studying leprosy. One of the incidents mentioned by Mrs. Grosvenor in introducing her was that when she and Dr. Grosvenor arrived in Manila aboard the China Clipper last summer, almost the first persons by whom they were greeted were the McKinleys—welcome faces far from home.

The meeting yesterday was the second of the Tuesday morning programs, which are held weekly throughout the season by the Washington Club. At the first, a year ago, Mrs. Clara McQuown spoke and, next week, Miss Mary Nourse will give a talk comparing the culture of China and Japan. Mrs. Grosvenor is in charge of the series. On Mondays there are book chats, of which Mrs. Safford is chairman and, on Wednesdays, luncheons at which many members entertain their guests and remain for bridge in the afternoon. One is being held today.

The Washington Club, one of the oldest and most distinguished in the Capital, was incorporated in 1891 and includes in its present membership several daughters of the original members.

Mrs. Alexander Graham Bell, mother of Mrs. Grosvenor, was one of the incorporators as was the mother of Mrs. C. Willard Hayes, who is now the president of the club. Mrs. Blair Lee was its first president. Its membership is limited to 600 and it was incorporated "for literary purposes, mutual improvement and promotion of social intercourse," says its charter. Its present home is the house at Seventeenth and K streets, formerly occupied by Vice President Fairbanks, which has been its clubhouse since 1914, and is engaged for many social affairs by other organizations and individuals because of the charm and convenience of its rooms.

Members who are entertaining at today's luncheon include Mrs. George Shaw, Mrs. Whitman Cross, Mrs. William M. Hannay, Mrs. Safford and her sister, Mrs. Louise S. Staats, who are entertaining together; Miss Martha Scott, Mrs. Arthur S. Wright and Mrs. Charles Fairfax. There will be about 60 present.

Eastern Virtually Clinches Interhigh Title, Defeating Tech, 7-6

MEDWICK VOTED MOST VALUABLE PLAYER AWARD

The Washington Post Sports

* WASHINGTON: WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1937 21

This Morning

Lively Trade Session Looms at Chicago.

By Shirley Povich.

Next month the baseball club owners will go a-marketing for talent at Chicago and good pitchers will be in demand. So will good outfielders and good infielders. In fact, and athlete who can maintain a respectable batting average and get around with some sprightliness in the field or turn in a decent pitching performance will not be without a job.

POVICH

Only the New York Yankees can afford to stand pat, need no replacements. Each other club in the American League will be merely sealing its own doom in the 1938 pennant race if it fails to bolster its lineup by trade or purchase. The Yankees last season were the only well-rounded club in the league. Every other team had its weak spot, or, more specifically, its weak spots.

If it were stud poker, you'd have to say the Yankees already have 'em beaten on sight. They will be going into the 1938 race with virtually the same team that won the pennant by 16 games. Only one replacement is necessary in the Yankee line-up and Manager Joe McCarthy can make that without going outside the Yankee fold.

From the Yankees' sensational Newark team McCarthy has plucked young Joe Gordan to step into Tony Lazzeri's vacated spot at second base. Gordon, the best young second baseman in the minors last year, a seemingly sure-fire success in the big leagues, simply happened to belong to the Yankees and McCarthy's task of replacing Lazzeri is virtually no task at all.

But every other club in the league will attend the Chicago meeting in something of a frenzy to patch up ruinous weaknesses. Washington needs pitchers, Detroit could use pitchers and an infielder, the White Sox are in desperate need of a third baseman, Boston lacks catchers, an outfielder and a pitcher, Philadelphia needs a slew of talent as do the Browns, and Cleveland will be on a greedy hunt for both infielders and outfielders.

Plight of Athletics.

The plight of the Athletics at one point last season bordered on the pathetic. After zooming to the top of the league standings in the first month of the race, the A's descended just as rapidly and nose-dived to the cellar. One of the A's readily pointed out the reason for the club's decline.

"See that spot out there between first and second base?" he said, pointing from the dugout. "Well, that's where we lost 10 games in one month. Poor Bill Cissell, our second baseman, couldn't go to his left and young Chubby Dean, our first baseman, couldn't go to his right. Between the two of 'em they left a hole that you could move the dugout through. Anything hit toward right centerfield on the ground was a hit. It was pitiful."

Cissell was released and Dean was converted into a pitcher, but there is precious little relief in sight for the A's.

Washington will go to the Chicago meeting not exactly empty-handed. Clarke Griffith and Manager Bucky Harris have a couple of fair pieces of trading material in First Baseman Joe Kuhel and Outfielder Al Simmons. Their lines will be baited for pitchers and perhaps a right-handed hitting outfielder.

No less than three clubs—the White Sox, Browns and A's—will be interested in Kuhel, but the Chicago team will be Griffith's particular bidder. Manager Jimmy Dykes is soured on First Baseman Zeke Bonura and for several years has taken a shine to Kuhel, who has always been a terrific hitter in the Chicago park. And Griffith believes that Chicago can be separated from at least one, perhaps two, pitchers, who would be valued by the Nats.

The disposal of Simmons may not be so easy. He is a high-priced piece of baseball bric-a-brac who will be 35 by the time the next season rolls around and the acquisition of Simmons will mean the addition of a high-salaried performer to the pay roll.

But Griffith, who is obsessed with the notion of a young team for Washington in 1938, will demand little in return for Simmons, who failed last year to show a consistency at bat.

Red Sox Need Help.

Boston's Red Sox may be taken on Red Kress as a possible replacement for Joe Cronin at shortstop, but Tom Yawkey will go into the Chicago market bent on procuring at least one outfielder and a pitcher. Despite the presence of Ben Chapman and Roger Cramer in the Red Sox outfield, the Sox did not possess a stand-out performer among the picket men last year. Yawkey will bid high for a right-handed hitting outfielder.

Detroit, suffering from the failure of Schoolboy Rowe to bring his arm into pitching condition, will be bent on securing a pitcher from the trading session, but Manager Mickey Cochrane will also be looking for replacement both at third base and at shortstop, where Marvin Owen and Bill Rogell, respectively, have slowed up pitifully. With Rudy York adding a powerful, long-distance bat to the team's attack, the Tigers scent a possible upset and another pennant in '38 if Cochrane can come up with a pitcher and repair his infield.

Cleveland will be overlooking no chance to add either an acceptable second baseman or third baseman. Odell Hale and Roy Hughes have

Bob Stange Blocks Try After Score

Lincoln Park Lads Near 1st Championship in Forty Years.

By Jack Munhall.

By the wide expanse of Tackle Bob Stange's chest and by the narrow margin of a single point, Eastern High virtually clinched its first interhigh football championship in 40 years yesterday. They defeated the defending Tech team, 7-6, in as thrilling a struggle as Eastern Stadium has housed this year.

Six thousand persons, the largest crowd to attend a scholastic game this season, stood breathlessly during the final five minutes of play to watch Eastern stave off a last-minute challenge to its 7-0 lead.

Scoring midway in the third period on a beautiful 10-yard "spot" pass, Bill Kemp to Dick Wade, Eastern apparently had stowed away the victory as the cloc' ticked off fading seconds and Tech's hopes faded with them.

But with a suddenness that made it almost unbelievable, the Manual Trainers traveled 86 yards to a touchdown. That left the result considerable in doubt because Quarterback Jack Belote, who has converted five times in six tries, was on hand to boot the tying marker. Then it was that a flying figure in blue, afterwards identified as big Stange, burst through the Tech line as if released from a cannon, threw his body into Belote's attempt and single-handedly preserved for Eastern a chance to annex its first title since 1897.

Outplayed at First.

Outplayed for the entire first half, Eastern was definitely back on its collective heels when the teams trooped off the field at the halw.

From the opening kick-off of the second half it was all too clear to Tech that it was facing not the listless Eastern team of the first half. Speith, tall, loose-strided fullback, grabbed the opening boot from Fleischman, broke away down the sidelines and was headed into the clear when Rassier dragged him down from the rear on the Tech 35-yard line.

From that point, with Kidwell and Speith alternating at carrying the leather, Eastern moved irresistibly goalward. Not until the oval rested on Tech's 9-yard stripe did Tech show signs of stiffening. Jack Connolly, left end, and Henry Rassierfi fullback, threw Kidwell for a 1-yard loss on an attempted end run and it was third down and 10 to go for Eastern.

On the next play Kemp moved slowly toward his right end, seemingly on a sweep. He suddenly halted, spun completely around and, without hesitating, whipped a short, bullet-like pass to Wade, who grasped the spinning ball on his fingertips while crossing the final white line.

Kirk Millar, whose specialty is place-kicking extra points, was called from the bench. He obliged with a perfect, high boot which sailed directly between the posts, and Eastern led, 7 to 0.

Both Players "Out."

But Tech was not through even when a kick by Murray had set it deep in its own territory on the 14-yard line. An innocent-appearing end sweep by Belote, the kind that Eastern's forward wall had almost completely bottled all afternoon, finally clicked. Aided by swift and deadly blocking, Belote spun away from several would-be tacklers, darted past the scrimmage line and was in the clear.

Down the field he raced, nearer and nearer to the Eastern goal line. With every stride he lengthened the gap between his flying form and the nearest pursuer. But he reckoned without Speith. Flinging aside his cumbersome helmet, Speith lowered his head and dug. Slowly, yet steadily, he closed the space that separated them. On the 10-yard line Speith left the ground and slammed into Belote with a jarring tackle. When the bodies were once again still and officials placed the ball on the 4-yard stripe, two motionless figures remained on the ground. They were Belote and Speith, each gasping, unable to arise. Time was called and they were revived.

Thoroughly aroused by the thought of losing a game which it apparently had won, Eastern en-

This Squad Reels Off 4,600 Yards—of Tape

Kirksville, Mo., Nov. 9 (AP).—Coach Fritz Faurot would glady trade medicine chest yardage for the gridiron variety.

His Kirkville teachers have used 460 10-yard rolls of adhesive tape. That amounts to more than 2 miles, more than twice the yardage his team has advanced by scrimmage, passing and kick returns all season.

Mrs. Meckley Cards 80 to Win Fallen Leaves Meet, Year's Final

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Mrs. Betty Palmer Meckley, Indian Spring's Middle Atalantic champion, fittingly climaxed a golf season she had dominated from its inception by annexing gross and net honors in the Tournament of the Fallen Leaves, yesterday at Washington. Mrs. Meckley scored 38-42, 80 and deducted a 1 handicap for a net 79.

Other gross prizes went to Mrs. Walter Stokes, Indian Spring, with an 88, and Miss Marion Brown, Manor, a stroke higher.

Net winners trailing Mrs. Meckley included Mrs. Gorham Freer, Washington, 105—24, 91; Mrs. C. H. Merrillat, also of the host club, 100—18, 82; Mrs. Stokes, 88—5, 83; Mrs. Claire Miller, 103—20, 83; Mrs. T. J. Johnson, Army and Navy, 95—12, 83, and Mrs. H. W. Sharpe, Indian Spring, 103—19, 84.

The event, the final links tournament for the ladies on the season's sch dule, was staged by the women's golf committee of the Washington club. One hundred and thirty-two players teed off and the record total of 101 turned in cards. Prizes of every description were offered for high and low handicap players alike.

Aside from winning the bet and gross honors, Mrs. Meckley took the most pars prize with 8 and figured in several others, but three awards were limited to a single person.

Mrs. Stokes won the allotted three prizes, carding 41 for the second nine, in addition to a net victory and most birdies. Marion Brown was among the double winners, gross, and first nine, of 42. Mrs. Merrillat won third net prize and low score on the second hole, a deuce. The latter won in a draw with Mrs. Meckley.

Other winners included Mrs. H. A. Knox, Congressional, who required but 30 putts for the 18 holes, and Mrs. Draper, a host member who required but 13 strokes on the par three holes.

Catamounts Defeat Shepherd Eleven, 14-0

Keyser, W. Va., Nov. 9.—Potomac State Catamounts continued to bowl over opposition in the West Virginia Conference by taking Shepherd College into camp, 14 to 0. It was the third straight conference triumph for the Cats.

Fairmont Teachers will play Potomac in the latter's homecoming game Armistice Day here. This will be Potomac's nal gafime if a contest is not arranged with Blue Ridge College, of New Windsor, Md., for November 20.

Writers Vote Card's Star Year's Best

Gabby Hartnett Second by 2 Points; Polls More First Place Ballots.

By Sid Feder.
Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Nov. 9.—In well-deserved recognition of baseball's classiest clouting sweep since the palmy days of Ty Cobb, the Baseball Writers Association today selected Ducky Medwick as the most valuable player in the National League for 1937.

Although they "split the ballot" and gave Gabby Hartnett, of the Cubs, more first-place nominations than the Cardinal clouter, the commitee of eight writers—one from each city in the league—more than made up for it in Medwick votes for second and third place, which counted heavily in the final point tabulations.

As a result, the No. 1 gas house gangster won the award and the accompanying Sporting News Trophy by 2 points, 70, to 68 for Gabby.

King Carl Hubbell, recipient of the award last year, wound up in third place with 32 points. Surprise of the balloting was the high total cast for the sensational "old man" rookie pitching pair of the Boston Reds, Jim Turner and Lou Fette, who were picked for fourth and fifth, respectively, with 30 and 29 points.

Medwick Makes Sweep.

For Medwick and the dose of pitchers' poison packed in his war club the award topped off a year in which he not only achieved his long-desired goal, the batting championship, but cleaned up in just about every other important individual offensive department as well. His classic performance precipitated the season's hottest argument as to whether he or Joe DiMaggio, of the Yankees, is the best all-round outfielder in the game today.

He batted for .400 for most of the season, then wound up with .374 after a late-season slump. He was the league champion in runs, with 111; hits, with 237; runs batted in, with 154; doubles, with 57, and tied with Mel Ott, of the Giants, for the home-run crown, with 31. Not since Cobb was taking things apart in his

An Old-Timer Talks Of Real Football.

By Jack Cuddy.

New York, Nov. 9.—Heffelfinger the happy heretic:

He wishes he could turn back the clock and come up with the grand old Yale teams of '88, '89, '90 and '91.

This Mr. William W. (Pudge) Heffelfinger, an all-time all-America guard, would like to bring back the Eli teams of his day and show our modern football elevens how to really play the game.

Heffelfinger wishes it to be known that he does not want to appear critical of twentieth century football but—he thinks they played much better back in his days when football stars wore handle-bar mustaches, when the flying wedge was one of the most devastating of offensive plays and a field goal was worth more than a touchdown.

And Mr. Heffelfinger must know whereof he speaks because those four teams he played on ran through 55 games and suffered only two defeats—one by Princeton in 1889 and another by Harvard in 1891.

The '88 team, on which Heffelfinger played as a freshman (in those days a player was allowed four years of varsity ball) and the 1891 team, when he was a senior, both went through 13 game schedules without defeat.

The years have been kind to Pudge—now nearing his seventieth year. He has seen football grow up from a campus sport to a major commercial institution. He has coached at California, Lehigh and Minnesota. And now, this husky gentleman with the iron grey hair, is a city commissioner in Minneapolis but he still is a football enthusiast.

The big mistake of modern football, Pudge said, is in the line play. These five and six-man and other screwy lines would have been pulverized had they attempted any such formation back in my day. You got to have at least seven men on the line. I would like to see our old Yale team against one of these screwy formations.

As for pass defense, which Coaches claim has brought about the five and six-man lines, Mr. Heffelfinger said:

They talk about passing and the necessity of a defense. If they used the proper line—a seven-man affair—there would be no worry about passes. A good seven-man line would break through every time and smother the passer. And that will always be the best pass defense in football."

Regarding line play in general:

In the old days the game was a pleasure. The line men got a chance to carry the ball as much as the backfielders. Today, it's a specialized game with the backfield doing the carrying. And I wonder how many players—with their strict training rules, blackboard drills and other tedious practices—have the fun we had?

* * *

"In addition, the men back in my day could take it better than the men of today. They trained four hours a week on contact work—four hours of solid scrimmage. Today, some teams never scrimmage once the season gets going for fear of injuring a player. That doesn't make tough football players."

On the subject of a crouching lineman:

The modern linesman crouches—and that puts him in a disadvantage. He can't see where the play is going. All he can do is to charge in there and hope for the best. The line man back in our day stood erect with their hands up and their eyes straight ahead. When the ball was snapped they usually could see to where it was going. Then they could break in there and go after the ball carrier. A standing line man can move into the play quicker and do much more damage than one who gets away from a crouch.

Thus speakes the old guard.

Senora, Favorite, Fails at Eighth Jump and Goes Down.

A Staff Correspondent.

Pimlico Race Track, Nov. 9.—Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's Pit Bull and Ral Parr's Legal Light ran a dead heat today in the Sagamore Purse, the feature race and named for Vanderbilt's breeding farm. The judges tried in vain to separate the two colts owned by popular Maryland sportsmen and each was awarded a split of first and second money or $1,600. A length and a half behind the struggle for first money came A. J. Joyner's Grass Cutter to be third in the field of seven.

The majority of the 12,000 customers believed that Legal Light, coming from behind on the outside, would get the camera decision but they failed to see Pit Bull's final lunge at the wire. However, it was a satisfactory ending for the Legal Light backers gained a $5.20 mutuel, with $6.90 going to those who wagered on Pit Bull.

The two colts arrived at the finish line by different methods but the final result was the same. Pit Bull broke in front and was never headed.

Legal Light had his troubles while racing hemmed in by horses and it was not until midway of the stretch that he was clear enough to make his bid.

This was the first dead heat in the State since Seabiscuit and Heelfly ran even-stephen at Laurel. The race was at 6 furlongs and was a thriller. The juveniles were bunched most of the way. Some Count was a paddock tip and was backed into favoritism. However, he had only one horse beaten at the all-important wire.

Gladys Whitney's Gay Charles scored an easy victory in the day's steeplechase event, winning under Apprentice Jockey T. Roby's grip, with Ad Lib second and Maenard third, after the usual brush engagement of 2 miles. Senoia, in the colors of Tommy Hitchcock, lost his chance when, after setting the pace, he stumbled badly while landing at the eighth fence. Gay Charles then took up the front running and had things his own way. The winner paid $5.90, but Senoia was the favorite.

After trying for three years, Zinnia, a daughter of Zev, finally emerged from the maiden ranks in the second race, leading six other Maryland breds to the wire in the mile and a sixteenth test. Westbrooke, a paddock tip, finished second, with Rancilla third. Zinnia was the choice at $6.50.

O'Buddy, claimed by R. C. Thatcher at Laurel, paid dividends to his new owner in the third race, bringing a $19.30 mutuel. Jockey Ken McCombs brought him along in the stretch to nip Greenski, which appeared to be overconfidently handled by Jockey Jackie Westrope. Songstop was third in the limit of a dozen juveniles.

Check Signal, winner of his last here, came back today with an obscure rider, H. Simmons, in the saddle and repeated, paying a $7.80 mutuel. Doris Rene and Formax chased the winner to the wire. Actress went lame early in the running.

Two Bob, former Whitneyite, came from behind to win the fifth race by two lengths from the Millsdale Stable's Infantry. Headin' Home was third after setting the pace most of the way. Jockey J. Longden gave the winner a masterful ride and a payoff of $7.70 was displayed.

been millstones about the collective necks of the Indians for a couple of years and Oscar Vitt, the new manager, will attempt to make a deal with the Browns for Third Baseman Harlan Clift.

A third baseman will be the chief object of the White Sox officials' presence at the trading session also. Manager Jimmy Dykes has given up all notions of returning to the bag and Tony Piet proved his inefficiency last year. The Sox would like to buy Buddy Lewis from the Nats but fear that Clark Griffith, who once sold a ball player for $250,000, would ask a cool million for Lewis.

McAuliffe Learns Lesson in Fierce Fight for Title

Following is the third of a series of dispatches on the life and times of the late Jack McAuliffe, who retired undefeated as Lightweight Champion of the World.

By Harry Ferguson.

United Press Staff Correspondent

New York, Nov. 9.—Jack McAuliffe defended his lightweight championship against Harry Gilmore, a hard-hitting Canadian, one January night in Lawrence, Mass., when the sound of the blows mingled with the hymns that a Salvation Army group was singing on a floor above the room in which the ring was pitched.

It was one of his hardest fights, and it wasn't made any easier by the fact that for months he had consumed much champagne and ale and, as he once said himself, had done much of his roadwork "around a faro table."

Jack Dempsey, the nonpareil, one of the great middle-weights of all time, was McAuliffe's second when the referee explained to the 30 spectators that it was a bout for the lightweight championship of the world with each boxer betting $1,000, winner take all.

Gilmore Erases Smile.

"I danced out of my corner with a big grin on my face," McAuliffe said, "but Gilmore smashed his left into my face and wiped off the grin with a big splotch of blood. I was groggy when I went back to my corner after the first round.

"Dempsey was whispering to me to keep away from that left, and suddenly I heard voices from above, going through what sounded to me like a chant. 'What's that noise?' I asked and Dempsey said: 'There's a Salvation Army meeting upstairs and they're singing 'Hold the Fort for I am Coming.' I told Dempsey if they were having as hard a time holding that fort as I was the one there in the ring I felt sorry for them.

"Between the 11th and 12th round my eyes began to close and Dempsey called over a doctor and said 'He's gone blind Doc, cut his eyes open.' The doctor began massaging my eyes and just before the bell rang I could just barely see through a slit in one of them. For the first time in the fight I began to hammer Gilmore's body. The Salvation Army began to sing "When the War Is Over We Will Wear a Crown' and that made me feel better, too.

"By the 26th round Gilmore's legs were tiring and I found I could outstep him. I went around him like a merry-go-round. In the middle of the 28th he dropped his guard about 6 inches trying to protect his body. I caught him square on the nose with a right and he was out cold. Later I learned I had broken his nose."

They had to hurry out of the room because someone had tipped off the police that a prize fight was being held. The first hotel McAuliffe and Dempsey went to turned them down because the marks of battle were all too plain on McAuliffe's face. They finally got into a hotel, but when they left the next day McAuliffe had to wear dark glasses and a muffler around his face for fear the police still would try to arrest him for participating in an illegal business like prizefighting.

The Gilmore fight convinced McAuliffe that he would have to do less training in bar-rooms.

"The memory of the terrific beating I took in the early rounds of the Gilmore fight," he said, "made me realize I should lead a quieter life. That resolution lasted three days—until one night I was introduced to Pat Sheedy, the famous gambler. We had a few drinks. For the reckless riding of luck I think Sheedy was the greatest gambler of them all. He was just like the gamblers you read about—tall, soft-spoken and well dressed. His fingers were long and thin.

"Sheedy was almost the direct opposite of Richard Canfield, for Pat liked to gamble against the odds, while Canfield preferred to run the game himself and depend for his winnings upon the 5 per cent margin in favor of the house. Sheedy had a remarkable memory and could remember just when every card fell in a stud poker game, who held it and what percentage of probability there was for every player to draw a pair. Faro was his favorite game.

House Bars Sheedy.

"He went into a gambling house in Hot Springs Ark., one night and played faro for two hours without revealing his name. Next night, when he came back somebody recognized him and the proprietor refused to sell Sheedy any chips. 'Mr. Sheedy,' the proprietor said, 'I'm an old man and I have to sleep nights; I'd rather you wouldn't play in my house.'"

McAuliffe's meeting with Sheedy was important because it was from the lips of the gambler that he first heard the name "Jim Carney."

That all led to a fight for the championship of the world in a New England barn—a fight that made McAuliffe, for the first time in his life, doubt his own courage.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHECK SIGNAL, $7.90, $4.30, $3.30; DORIS RENE, $6.30, $4.40; FORMAX, $15.90.

CHECK SIGNAL improved position with a rush on outside approaching stretch and disposed of DORIS RENE in gain. The latter was forced to race wide to get to front and held on well. FORMAX was prominent from start, but tired in final stages. WITCH GIRL closed gamely. ROMAN PRIDE and HIBLAZE had early speed. ACTRESS went lame in the running.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,100. Pimlico Graded Handicap, Class B. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates for all but Mrs. E. Denemark's ch. f. TWO BOB, within striking distance from start, came through on inside when placed to drive and disposed of INFANTRY to win drawing out. INFANTRY moved to HEADIN' HOME when called on, but could not resist winner. HEADIN' HOME faltered after setting good pace. TEDDY HASLAM had speed in spots. PAGEBOY was unprepared at break.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $2,500 added. The Sagamore Handicap. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:41½. Off 3:43½. Winners, Ral Parr's ch. c. HANDCUFF closed some ground. AUTUMNQUEST failed to threaten seriously. EQUERRY raced wide after breaking slowly.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. The Barclay. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:18½. Off 4:19½. At The Post

WITH BILL BENNINGS

Selections at Pimlico.

Dear Al:

I'm not going to use names but what is to follow is fact and shows the uncertainties of horse racing. A certain horse went to the post at Laurel. His owner had a big bet and so did the trainer and all the friends of both. The horse ran out of the money. At this track the same horse went to the post. The owner made only a sentimental wager of $5 across the board. The trainer bet $2 and then sold 50 cents worth to his wife. The trainer's son bet $10 on another horse in the same race. Friends of the owner and trainer did not bet. Of course the horse won this time and what's more he paid off in box car figures. Now the wife of the trainer is ashamed to look her friends straight in the face. They probably believe she deliberately spread the information that the horse did not have a chance and that she cleaned up a fortune. Jockey F. Kopel, injured in yesterday's spill here, is in bad shape at the Baltimore Hospital. Stewards are investigating a report that the horse, Grace Carome, went blind. The horse was claimed by the Paragon Stable. Amateur Jockey Willie Jones was suspended for the meeting for his riding which led to the disqualification of Little Marty yesterday. Wayne Wright is leading the riders here with seven wnners. BILL.

First race—Promoter, teamed with Deuce as the Buckley-Parke entry, appears to have an excellent chance of taking this purse. Needs only the right ride. Spinach is old, but likes this course. Dundrillen for the show end.

Second race—Chase Him might find this the right spot. He's not much horse, but meets only Maryland breds. Jungo has raced fairly well on occasions and is dangerous. Ann McGinly to take care of the others.

Third race—Isoroom is the speed demon of the Millsdale Stable and appears ready to add another purse. Galapas had no chance in the stake here Saturday, but has worked well. Deep End is a possible surprise.

Fourth race—Light Chatter is in action with a 104-pound feather in this event and may show to advantage. I'm going to string along. Joan Asbestos is suited by conditions and is dangerous. Dunnamany may be the sleeper in the field.

Fifth race—Biologist gets in light and is fit as hands can make him. May bring another purse to E. R. Bradley. Dark Beau is improving and may stick it out here. Bottle Cap is dropping down.

Sixth race—Clingendaal and Rough Time promise to battle it out for this purse and I'm going to take them in the order named. High Fleet's last was a beaut and this one is due consideration.

Seventh race—Rough Party, Miney Myerson and Que Gato is the way I prefer them in this test.

Eighth race—Count Tetrarch gets the call in the day's finale. Prince Splendor and Brilliant Light to take care of the others.

Best bet—Biologist.

Pittsburgh Displaces California as Nation's Top-Ranking Grid Team

'Bama Ranks Third; Rams Are Fourth

Dartmouth, Yale, Santa Clara and Duke Follow in That Order.

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

New York, Nov. 9.—Pittsburgh's football powerhouse, trumphant in the Rose Bowl last New Year's Day and seemingly ambitious to try it again, displaced the University of California today as the Nation's No. 1 team.

The combination of Pitt's emphatic victory over Notre Dame and California's scoreless tie with Washington helped bring about the biggest shakeup so far in the national gridiron ranking poll conducted by the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh collected a majority of the first-place ballots, 31½ out of 55, and piled up a decisive margin on points while California dropped to second place after leading the procession for three weeks. Alabama received more first-place votes than California in this week's balloting, but was not supported strongly enough otherwise to avoid dropping a notch to third place.

The marked swing of football's balance of power to the Northeast, with five teams from this section in the "first ten," is indicated by the following tabulation:

(First places bracketed; points scored 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1.)

First ten.	Points.
1. Pittsburgh (31½)	509½
2. California (9)	449
3. Alabama (13)	422
4. Fordham (1½)	387½
5. Dartmouth	253
6. Yale	215
7. Santa Clara	166
8. Duke	159
9. Villanova	62
10. Minnesota	61

Second ten—11. Nebraska, 55; 12. Louisiana State, 52; 13. Baylor, 43; 14. Auburn, 30; 15. Rice, 29; 16. Colorado University, 23; 17. Indiana, 13; 18. Notre Dame, 12; 19. Holy Cross, 7; 20. Arkansas, 6.

Others mentioned—Army, 2; Washington, Ohio State, Montana and Lafayette, 1 each.

Minnesota, traveling a surprisingly zig-zag course, bounced back into the first ten after one week's absence. Duke and Villanova also moved into the select circle, as the experts filled gaps left by Baylor, Nebraska and Ohio State. Baylor skidded from fourth place to thirteenth after its first defeat.

Nebraska's ranking at No. 11, a notch below Minnesota, marks one of this week's inconsistencies. Even though the Corn Huskers lost some prestige in barely tying Kansas, the fact remains they beat Minnesota, which rallied voting support by trouncing Iowa.

Only two of the top ten, Alabama and Santa Clara, have records clear of either tie or defeat. Seven others have nothing worse than a tie on their slates, including the new famous and third successive deadlock between Pitt and Fordham. Minnesota has been licked twice.

Joe Medwick

heyday has the game seen anything like it.

With each of the eight voting experts casting a ballot for ten choices in the order he wanted them selected, Medwick drew two first-place nominations; Hartnett three. Each was selected twice on a second-place ballot. But Medwick collected four third-place mentions, while the rest of Hartnett's votes were strung out, one each for third, fourth and sixth.

A first-place vote counted 10 points; second, 9; third, 8, and so on. In addition to Medwick and Hartnett, first-place nominations were cast for three others—Hubbell, Shortstop Dick Bartell and Catcher Harry Danning, all members of the New York Giants' family.

Third member of the Cardinal cast to win the award since the baseball writers took over the selection in 1931, Joseph Michael Medwick follows Manager Frankie Frisch (1931) and Pitcher Dizzy Dean (1934) into this particular niche of baseball's hall of fame. He has been a powerhouse among National League batsmen ever since he broke in with the Cardinals in 1932, after seasoning at Scottdale, in the Mid-Atlantic League, and Houston, of the Texas League.

His six-year batting average is just under the .350 mark. He has always been at or near the top in slugging and timely hitting, and annually, prior to this year, threatened the batting championship. In his one world series, 1934, he hit for .379. Native and resident of Carteret, N. J., Medwick will be 26 on the 24th of this month.

Bisons Here, Prepare for G. W. Battle

Terps, Hoyas, Cards Drill for Tough Encounters on Saturday.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

North Dakota State's gridmen arrived in town yesterday after a trek halfway across the Nation, and immediately set about preparing for Saturday's game with George Washington, which will be the Colonial's annual home-coming.

The Bisons caused a mild stir in local sports circles—or rather Charley Pollock, a burly tackle did. Word got around that Jim Pollard, a son of the former all-American Negro star, Fritz Pollard who played at Brown, was with the team. Jim is a fullback, but, it so happens plays for North Dakota University. The similarity of names caused the error.

Then Coach C. C. Finnegan threw the press in a turmoil by taking about a star center tagged Tin Yan Jim-On. Finnegan, it must be noted, was not drinking, but actually telling the truth. Young Mr. Jim-On is a Hawaiian, direct from the auld sod, who has been playing a bang up game for the Bisons.

North Dakota seems to have recovered its poise after absorbing a 86-7 shellacking at Minnesota's hands earlier in the season, and only last week eked out a thrilling 18-12 victory over Greeley in the last few seconds of play. Finnegan, who is the epitomy of modesty, doesn't think you can or should sell his boys short. He thinks they'll take the Colonials Saturday.

Maryland's reserves worked out about an hour with the freshman team, while the regulars rested, but the latter will be out in full force this afternoon. Head Coach Frank Dobson's plans call for only about two hours' total work in preparation for the Penn State game.

Exams and laboratory work confined a majority of Georgetown's men to classs rooms yesterday, 19 reporting for practice. Hagerty let the boys off lightly with a touch football game, and the usual kicking and signal drills. The Hoyas will leave for New York Friday morning, arriving in time for a workout in Yankee Stadium that afternoon.

Catholic University's eleven leaves for Miami this afternoon, arriving tomorrow in time for a night drill in the new municipal stadium. Dutch Bergman will take a squad of approximately 20 men, including Irish Carroll, who probably will not play because of an injured arm.

Laurel Park Training Farm Sold to Washington Buyer

By a Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Nov. 9.—Richard H. Hutchison, Washington furniture man, purchased the pretentious Laurel Park Farm today at public auction for $78,700. The Capital man, whose home is at 3201 Garfield street, bid only $100 more than Tony Pelleteri, owner and trainer of the Millsdale Stable.

After the sale, Mrs. Hutchison indicated that the 373-acre farm, long identified with the development of race horses, probably would not be used again as a turf headquarters. She said the family did not own a horse at the present time and was not interested in racing.

The Millsdale Stable would have used the farm for its winter quarters and Trainer Elmer Trueman, of Washington, who trained horses there for eight years for Ral Parr, was on the scene ready to take charge for the horseman.

On the regulation mile track that borders the Washington boulevard, many prominent horses have been developed, including Sir Barton, winner of the Kentucky Derby in the silks of the late Commander J. K. L. Ross, former owner of the property. Among the stars that Ral Parr sent to the races from the spacious plant were Her Grace, brilliant stake winner, and Star Porter, holder of two Maryland track records.

Whitney Horses Win In National Events

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 9.—Mrs. John Hay Whitney continued her domination of the hunter division at the National Horse Show when she carried off first and second honors in two of the major events on today's program.

The Upperville, Va., and New York horsewoman, personally accounted for the four ribbons, winning the two firsts with Grey Knight, outstanding contender for the Hunter championship, and the seconds with Spring Hope, an eight-year-old bay mare.

After the pair had run one, two, in the class for lightweight qualified hunters, they came back to finish in the same order in the Henry Dickson memorial challenge trophy for green or qualified hunters, over a less difficult course. Both times they scored over Alvin Untermeyer's highly regarded Hexameter of Greenwich, Conn.

Mrs. Whitney entered seven of her fine hunters in the cup event, but rode only Grey Knight and Spring Hope. Among the defeated horses was Mrs. E. H. Augustus' Chatter Chat of Willoughby, Ohio, the 1936 champion, which wound up fourth.

The two victories gave the wife of the New York State racing commissioner a record of four firsts and five seconds.

While Mrs. Whitney was moving up among the leading blue ribbon winners, Mrs. Loula Long Combs, of Kansas City, pulled farther away in quest of the honors won by Frances Dodge, of Rochester, Mich., last year.

Mrs. Combs sent out only one of her six horses, but that one was Captivation, a favorite to regain the harness horse crown she won on her last appearance in the National in 1934. The 8-year-old chestnut mare won the Warham Whitney Memorial Trophy to give Mrs. Combs her ninth blue ribbon.

A. B. Dick, owner of the Dickfield Farm, of Guernee, Ill., and runner-up to Miss Dodge last year, stretched his blue ribbon record to six for second place, with Stonehedge Temptation. The 3-year-old brown mare was placed first among single harness ponies under 12.2 hands. Second place went to Eastertide from J. Macey Willet's Cassilis Farm of New Marlboro, Mass.

Other important triumphs saw Mrs. John W. White, jr., the former Claire Faitoute, of Short Hills, N. J., retrieve the Theodore Frelinghuysen Memorial Challenge Cup for three-gaited saddle horses over 14.2 hands with Short Hills. She beat out last year's winner—Mountain Romance from L. Victor Weil's Fair City Stables, of Elberon, N. J.

Judy King, 25-year-old Atlanta, Ga., horsewoman, got into the blue ribbon picture with her team of Killearn Magi and Dufferin Dare. It was the fourth success for the Southern girl, who was third last year.

Col. Sasse Ill, Quits As Football Coach At Mississippi State

State College, Miss., Nov. 9 (AP).—Lieut. Col. Ralph Sasse resigned today as head football coach at Mississippi State College.

The former Army mentor gave up the post on orders of his physician, Dr. J. W. Eckford. The resignation is effective at the end of the season, but Dr. Eckford said he had asked that the colonel be released from coaching duties immediately.

Sasse was confined to his bed at his home. Members of the household said he was too ill to make a statement. A colorful figure in football, he began coaching here in 1935.

His first two seasons were unusually successful, but his team was beaten this year by Texas A. and M., Auburn and Louisiana State, the latter winning last Saturday, 41-0.

Swift Eagle and His Tom Toms Too Much for Swede

Unparalled in the history of local wrestling was the protest Cliff Olsen, Minnesota grappler, filed with Promoter Joe Turner yesterday, threatening to pull out of tomorrow night's feature bout with Chief Thunderbird unless the Vancouver Indian "keeps his stooge, Swift Eagle, away from the ringside."

Olsen is all hot in the collar over the incident two weeks ago when the tom-tom beating Swift Eagle, a friend of Thunderbird's from New Mexico, parked himself on the Chief's corner and spurred him on to victory.

The match almost ended in a riot after Olsen made at least eight attempts to beat up Swift Eagle, destroy his tom-tom and oust him from the arena.

There is nothing in the books, Turned said, to prevent a wrestler from having a stooge, or second, and therefore the promoter said he doubted if he could keep Swift Eagle out of the chief's corner. Turned said he would suggest that Olsen import El Brendel, the Swedish comedian, to act as his second, and offset whatever capers Swift Eagle might cut up. Olsen claims Swift Eagle's tom-tom beat and war cry at the strategic moment beat him here two weeks ago.

The mat card was completed yesterday, with the booking of some seasoned grapplers.

Jack Hader, Kansas, is pitted against Bob Roberts, of Dayton, in a 30-minute bout. Mayes McLain will meet Wee Willie Davis and Nick Campofreda will take on Rudy Dusek.

In the semiwind-up, Hans Steinke the German, will meet Wally Dusek, a cousin of Rudy's.

20,000,000 From U. S. Visit Canada in Year

1937 Expenditures Likely to Exceed 1929 Peak of $309 Million.

Montreal, Nov. 9.—Reports from all parts of Canada indicate that 1937 has been an excellent year in the tourist trade," says Dr. Donald M. Marvin, economist of the Royal Bank of Canada today. "The number of people who have come to Canada is equal to the number entertained in the record year 1929, and this year the visitors have again been spending freely. It would appear probable that the total for 1937 will equal or exceed the record attained in 1929, namely $309,000,000.

In the first eight months of 1935, 1936 and 1937 foreign automobiles which entered Canada numbered 2,396,000, 2,811,000 and 3,184,000 respectively. The eight months of 1936 showed a gain of 415,000 cars as compared with 1935, and the eight months of 1937, in turn, a gain of 373,000 over 1936. Of the cars which entered Canada in 1937 1,000,000 remained within the country for periods which varied from two days to two months, and more than 1,300 cars were here from two to six months.

"About 20,000,000 people from the United States will have visited Canada before the year is over, and between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 of them will have stayed here two days or more. Statistics such as these portray in a quick and graphic manner the magnitude and recent rapid expansion of the tourist trade of Canada."

Production Of Electricity At New High

Revenue Sales Also Expected to Set New Record.

New York, Nov. 9.—The annual output of electricity in the United States, after declining from a record high of 97,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours in 1929 to 83,000,000,000 at the low for the depression in 1932, recovered more than its entire loss in the three following years. Production rose to a new record high of 99,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours in 1935. This was followed by a further expansion to 114,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours in 1936 and the present outlook is that a new high peak for the third consecutive year will be reached in 1937, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute.

Production during the first eight months of this year amounting to 78,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours as against 73,000,000,000 in the same period last year. Preliminary reports show that the output since August has continued to run at a higher rate than a year ago although the tendency has been toward a narrowing of the gain.

A downward trend of electricity prices since 1932 has been an important factor stimulating the expansion of output to new high records. The price of electricity at the present time is at the lowest level on record. The increase in the amount sold, however, has been more than sufficient to offset the reduction in prices, and revenue from this year promises to exceed last year's record high figure of $2,073,000,000.

United States Holds 50% of World's Gold

By the Associated Press.

The $10,250,000 of gold to be shipped from this country today is but a drop in the bucket compared with America's total golden hoard.

The United States gold stock now totals about $12,500,000,000, over half the world's total. It increased from about $4,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000 early in 1934, when the Roosevelt Administration reduced the amount of gold in the dollar, and since then has climbed about $5,000,000,000 because of the flow of foreign money here.

Building Rise As Reflection Of Prosperity

Bank Review Holds It Necessary to Recovery.

New York, Nov. 9.—Continued depression in residential building is illustrated by pronounced slackening in activity since the higher levels attained in the first four months of the year, says the New York Trust Co. in its current issue of the Index. While contract awards for the January-September period were 25 per cent higher than in the corresponding months of 1936, September awards were below those of September, 1936, according to the bank review, in comparison with awards running 78 per cent above last year's levels from January through April.

"Although building has shown progressive improvement since the almost complete stagnation it experienced during the depth of the depression" the review, states, "it still lags far behind other phases of industrial activity. As one of the most important elements in the general economic picture, it is generally agreed that it must increase very materially if recovery is to continue, and while there are reasons to believe that it will do so, the relatively slow progress so far made has proved distinctly disappointing. The conditions necessary for a boom—a housing shortage, rising rents and enhanced national incomes—would appear to have developed, but in the meantime actual building is still retarded by high costs, labor difficulties and the effect upon credit of uncertainty in fiscal matters.

"To encourage recovery sooner rather than later, it is clear that contractors and labor must co-operate to minimize costs and difficulties and thereby encourage prospective homeowners to start operations about which they are still hesitant."

Utility, Copper and Steel Shares Lead Slight Rise in Quiet Market

Conciliatory Attitude of SEC Toward Utilities, Rise in Domestic Copper and Improved Dollar Aids Advance.

By Frederick Gardner,
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Nov. 9.—Buyers were in the stock market for utility, copper and steel shares today and leading issues finished fractions to 2 points higher.

What was interpreted as a more conciliatory attitude of the SEC toward utility companies stimulated considerable interest in this group, and possibility of modification of the capital gains and undistributed profits imposts, at the coming session of Congress, attracted day to day traders to the general list.

A sharp upturn in the London metal market and a modest rise in domestic commodity prices helped coppers, many investors taking the view the long decline in staples might be near its close.

Volume Decrease.

Despite improved sentiment, transactions reached only 1,048,770 shares, compared with yesterday's 1,377,456. The Associated Press composite average of 60 stocks advanced .9 of a point to 46.0.

Gold Shipped Abroad.

Announcement by the Treasury more than $10,000,000 in gold would be shipped to France arrested the recent mark-up of foreign currencies and the dollar improved generally in exchange transactions. Final quotations for sterling were $4.99⅞, off 2½ cents, while the French franc ended at 3.39¾ cents, down .01¾ of a cent.

Public Service of New Jersey was the leading stock performer among utilities, finishing with a gain of 2½ points at 36. Consolidated Edison added 1½ at 25⅜, and wide fractions were picked up by Electric Power & Light at 12⅝, and American Waterworks at 12⅝.

Others to move ahead included Anaconda 27½, Kennecott 31¼, Phelps Dodge 22⅜, U. S. Steel 55¼, National Steel 61¾, Chrysler 69⅞, J. I. Case, 94½, International Harvester 65¼, Westinghouse 94¾, Du-Pont 115¼, Allied Chemical 157, Phillips Petroleum 42⅜, Pennsylvania Railroad 23, Allis Chalmers 43½ and Philip Morris 76½.

Rail Issues Gain.

Railroad issues led the bond market to higher ground in today's dealings.

Federal loans closed with gains predominating. Advances ranged up to 5-32 of a point while a few scattered losers were off around 6-32 of a point.

Lower priced rails thrust forward fractions to around 2 points. Among the wider gainers were Erie 5s at 44, up 2; Baltimore & Ohio, 4½s at 38⅞, up 1⅜; Missouri Pacific 5s at 20¼, up 1¾; Southern Railway 4s at 51½, up 1, Southern Pacific 4½s at 63, up 1⅛.

Other gainers included International Hydro Electric 6s at 65, up 1½, and American Water Works 6s at 94½, up ½. Improvement in utility liens reflected possibility of a more lenient attitude on the part of the SEC toward the power companies, in the opinion of some observers.

Foreign Loans Up.

Foreign dollar loans were marked by a brisk run-up of 2¾ points in Cuba 5½s to 65½. German and Japanese obligations worked up fractions to around a point while Italian issues slumped. South American bonds improved with few exceptions.

Turnover for all bonds totaled $7,624,425 Monday.

The Associated Press averages for ten utilities advanced .2 of a point to 92.6. Rail and industrial averages dipped slightly.

Banks Are Blamed For Market Drop

New York, Nov. 9.—"Is recovery over? Are we on the eve of another great depression? Is cash the best investment for the near future? These are some of the questions which are answered by Lawrence Dennis, economist for E. A. Pierce & Co., in a comprehensive analysis of what he terms an intermediate deflation.

"He blames the heavy liquidation of bonds by the banks, beginning back in July, 1936, for the bear market and ensuing business decline of 1937. And he stresses the fact that the market break preceded by several months the business recession, arguing therefrom that bank credit deflation and the consequent bear market caused rather than discounted the ensuing business recession."

Foreign Exchange.

By the Associated Press.

Stabilization operations strengthened the dollar yesterday against leading European currencies.

The British pound sterling was quoted at $5.01, off 1⅜ cents from yesterday's high of more than two years. Other currencies showed a similar decline in terms of the dollar. The French franc was .00½ cent at 3.41 cents, the Belgian belga, .01 at 17.06; the Swiss franc, .06 at 23.22, and the Netherlands guilder, .03 at 55.52.

The news from Washington this country was shipping $10,000,000 in gold to France, making payment for dollars bought by the French government control fund to stabilize the ratio between the dollar and the franc, had a beneficial effect on the dollar in foreign exchange trading.

The dollar closed 1⅜ cents higher in London at 5.01⅛, compared with the overnight rate of 16.02 for sterling in New York. In Paris, the dollar closed at the equivalent of 3.407 cents to the franc, against 3.415 in New York overnight.

Wheat Prices Advance With Export Sales

Frost Damage in the Argentine Acts as Stimulant.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Nov. 9.—Enlarged export purchases of North American wheat, totaling upwards of 1,250,000 bushels, did much today to hoist Chicago wheat values 2¼ cents maximum.

Unconfirmed estimates that recent frost damage in Argentina had caused the loss of 20,000,000 bushels of wheat served also as a stimulating factor. So, too, did reports that critical moisture conditions southwest were affecting adversely next year's domestic crop prospects.

At the close Chicago wheat futures, showing considerable reaction as a result of late profit-taking, ruled ¾@1¼ cents above yesterday's finish, December 87⅛@87⅝, May 87¾@87⅞, July 83½@83⅝; corn ⅛@1⅜ up, December 56⅛@56¼, May 58⅜, July 59⅝; oats ⅜ to 1 cent advanced, December 30¼ and rye at a bulge of 1 to 1¾ cents, Dec. 67¼. Provisions results were 5 to 12 cents dearer.

Bob Burns Says—

I feel sorry for these movin' picture producers. Every time they go out on a party there'll be some fond mama who will have her daughter recite "Mary Had a Little Lamb" for him and when the mother asks him if he doesn't think little Barbara Ann should be in pictures, he has'ta be awfully careful about what he says.

These producers should take a lesson from my Uncle Flint. There's a man that never left himself open. One day a young fella come to him and says "Your daughter, Lobella, has promised to be my wife." Uncle Flint looked at him and didn't say anything.

Finally the boy says "Well, ain't you gonna tell me to take her and be happy?" and Uncle Flint says, "No, I don't want no responsibility—I'm just gonna say "'Take her.'"

Ex-D. C. Man Found Dead in Virginia Creek

Apparently Fell From Rail Trestle; Inquiry May Be Ordered.

Investigation of the death of William Davidge, jr., 32, of Greenwich, Va., whose body was found early yesterday in Broad Run Creek, beneath a Southern railway trestle, continued last night as Dr. E. H. Marstellar, Prince William County coroner, announced he would confer with police concerning an inquest.

Dr. Marstellar said he probably would confer with Sheriff J. P. Kerlin early today. He added, however, that "from what I know of the case, it was an accidental death."

Davidge, a former resident of Washington, was found by Joseph Rollins, a mail carrier. The only mark on the body was a long cut across the back of the head.

State Officer E. H. Howe said last night evidence pointed toward accidental death in a fall from the trestle.

Kerlin said he had learned that Davidge and several companions had left Manassas Monday night to tow an old auto they had purchased. Apparently one of the cars stalled, he added.

Expressing the belief that Davidge probably had started on foot to get help, Kerlin said the location of the body and absence of more wounds indicated he had not been struck by a train.

Davidge's wife survives. He attended public schools in Washington and was graduated from Central High School. He worked at the postoffice about three years ago. His father, mother and a sister live in Washington at 1826 I street northwest.

Loyalists Hold Edge in North, Renn Asserts

Exiled German Author and International Brigade Leader Speaks Here.

Ludwig Renn, exiled German author and chief of staff of the Eleventh International Brigade in the Spanish Loyalist armies, Monday told an audience of 200 the military position of the Barcelona government is fundamentally sound because of its great superiority in man-power over Franco's forces.

This advantage he attributed to popular support of the Loyalists by workers and peasants.

Speaking at the Y. W. C. A. at a meeting sponsored by the League of American Writers, Renn said the fall of Gijon and collapse of the northern front had long been anticipated by Loyalist commanders because of the impossibility of reinforcing the Basques.

He said winter already had set in on the Aragon front and that the vaunted rebel offensive to split Valencia and Barcelona cannot be undertaken for months.

Renn said government troops on the Madrid front will be glad to see the Italians, routed at Guadalajara last spring, when they return to operations in central Spain.

Renn is the author of "War," "After War" and "Death Without Battle." He spent two years in a concentration camp after the Nazis came to power and then fled in 1935. He intends to return to the Spanish war next spring.

Destroyers to Replace Two in Spanish Waters

The Navy Department announced yesterday that the destroyers Claxton and Manley had relieved the Hatfield and Kane, which have been on duty with the special squadron organized last year to assist in the evacuation of Americans from war-torn Spain.

The Hatfield and Kane have sailed from Gibraltar en route to the Charleston, S. C., Navy Yard for overhauling before rejoining the fleet in the Pacific.

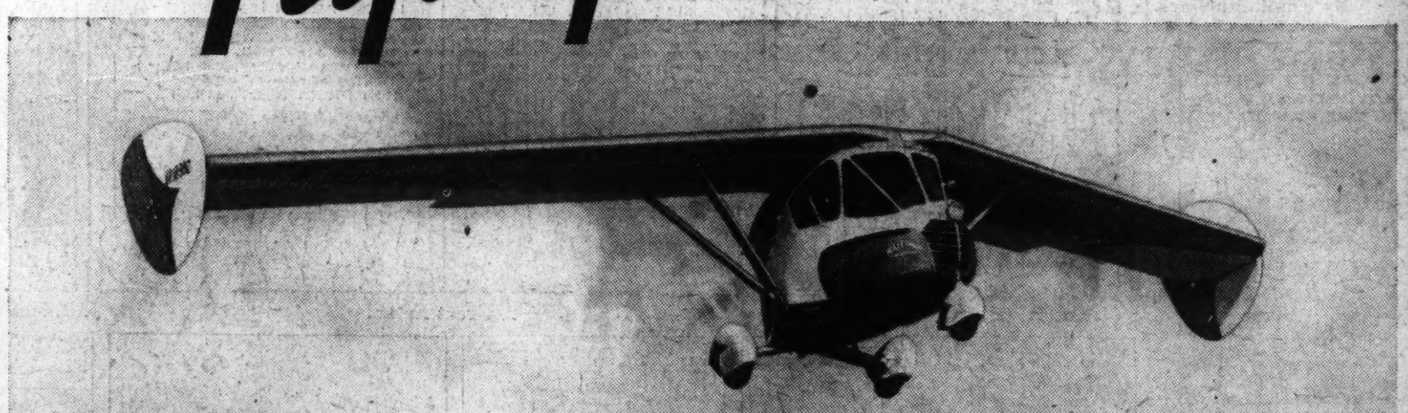
Adds New Fox Hunting Wrinkle by Using Auto

Jackson, Tenn., Nov. 9 (AP).—Fred Thrasher, fox hound fancier of Jackson, Miss., has introduced a new wrinkle to the lod sport of fox hunting.

Attending his forty-fourth meeting of the National Fox Hunters Association, he careened through the unblazed West Tennessee hills in a five-passenger automobile yesterday, dexterously dodging tree stumps, logs and gullies along the way. He didn't find a fox.

He insisted the stunt was nothing unusual.

World's first Flying Automobile



uses High Geared

Arrowbile with its wings detached. When handled like a conventional automobile the propeller does not revolve. Drive is through the rear wheels. The Studebaker engine and High Geared BLUE SUNOCO give the "automobile" a top road speed of 70 miles per hour.

"Jerry" Phillips, Hollywood, California, pilot of one of the Studebaker powered Waterman Arrowbiles, the world's first flying automobile. In flying this ship from California to New York, Phillips encountered all kinds of weather—sunshine, bitter cold temperatures, rain and blinding snowstorms.

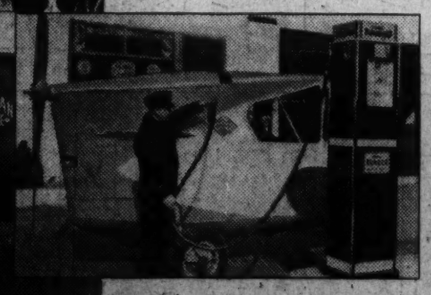
BLUE SUNOCO
THE ONLY TRUE BLUE
MOTOR FUEL

because, as Pilot Phillips says:

(1) "It snaps the motor into instant life, even on cold mornings.

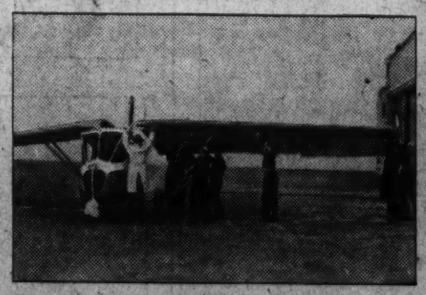
(2) It performs as well in this motor as higher-priced aviation gasolines."

Sunoco Motor Oil is used exclusively



Pilot Phillips simply drives into any Sunoco station and fills the tank. He says, "The performance of the plane is as good with Blue Sunoco as with premium priced airplane fuels."

Once the Arrowbile has reached the airport, the wings may be attached in three or four minutes, and it is ready for the airways. Removing the wings is equally simple, and they may be stored conveniently.



The Waterman Arrowbile, powered with a Studebaker Six Automobile Motor, was on display at the New York Auto Show
